Complaint lodged with UN against Iranian attack

Kuwait reserves right to retaliate

UNITED NATIONS, April 1, (Agencies): Kuwait in a complaint to the UN has accused Iran of attacking its island of Bubiyan in the northern Gulf and reserved the right to retaliate against any aggression.

In a letter to Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Kuwaiti UN representative Mohammad Abulhasan said three Iranian gunboats earlier in the day opened fire with machineguns and rocket propelled grenades against military posts on Bubiyan island, wounding two Kuwaiti military personnel.

Patrolling troops returned fire at the boats, forcing them to retreat, the ambassador said.

Tense

"This violation of Kuwait's security and sovereignty will increase the already tense situation in the area, and shall lead to adverse consequences for the stability and security of the region," Abulhasan said.

"Kuwait reserves the right to retaliate against any aggression on its territories or sovereignty," he added.

Perez de Cuellar said yesterday he was firmly of the view that the hostilities in the Iraq-Iran war should not be extended and that the territorial integrity of third countries in the area should not be violated.

He was responding to the letter addressed to him by Abulhasan.

Iran has denied the attack.

Abulhasan said he had urged the Security Council members, especially the five permanent ones, to take all the necessary measures to guarantee that this was not repeated.

Abulhasan said the council members showed total understanding and expressed their determination to support the integrity and stability of Kuwait.

Kuwait has denied Iranian accusations that it allows Iraqi forces to use Bubiyan, a few miles from the southern war theatre.

Kuwait's Defence Minister Sheikh Nawaf Al Ahmed, yesterday visited Bubiyan island and reaffirmed the country's readiness to repulse aggression.

"The instructions (to the armed forces) are quite clear in dealing with any unknown target in defence of our land and people," Sheikh Nawaf told personnel manning the site.

Sheikh Nawaf listened to a report by the commander of the garrison on the island.

He vowed "we will not be lenient toward anyone who tries to undermine our sovereignty or attack our military or civilian positions."

Sheikh Nawaf, who was accompanied by the Army commanders, praised the reaction of the garrison in dealing with the Iranian boats and said: "We will stand together in protecting our beloved country against any foreign aggression."

Sheikh Nawaf, who visited the two victims of the Iranian aggression at Al-Addan hospital accompanied by the Chief of General Staff, Major General Mezeid Abdul-Rahman Al Sanei, said that the condition of the wounded calls for no alarm.

Prevent

The injured said their wounds are medals of honour on their chests for defending Kuwait and vowed to make the same sacrifice for the country as soon as they recover, the minister quoted the injured as saying.

Kuwait hopes diplomacy will prevent further clashes with Iran.

Kuwaiti Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmed indicated Kuwait wanted to defuse tension.

"I hope this attack is not repeated, especially now that we are attempting to build good relations with Iran," he told reporters on Wednesday.

Only last week, Sheikh Sabah described relations with Iran as good and said Kuwait would resume diplomatic representation in Tehran as soon as Iran and Iraq stopped bombarding each other's cities.

Kuwait came close to breaking relations with Tehran last year when Iran fired seven Silkworm missiles at Kuwaiti oil installations. The missiles are believed to have been fired from the Faw peninsula, which Iran captured from Iraq two years ago.

Uprising continues unabated

Israel lifts blockade on occupied areas

OCCUPIED Jerusalem, April 1, (UPI): Soldiers killed two Palestinian protesters and wounded 15 others today in a clash that erupted outside a West Bank mosque after Friday prayers. Palestinian sources charged the Army also gunned down four Arabs yesterday while the West Bank was sealed off to outsiders, including reporters.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir yesterday assailed Israel's Arab adversaries as "grasshoppers" whose heads would be smashed against the boulders of Israel.

In another development, authorities said more than 700 Arabs have been placed under administrative detention since the Palestinian uprising began almost four months ago. Under a detention order, a suspect can be jailed for six months without trial or charges.

More than 4,000 additional Palestinians have been sentenced to specific jail terms for their alleged involvement in riots.

The eruption of violence today came only hours after the military ended three days of unprecedented security measures in the occupied territories, lifting an around-the-clock curfew in the Gaza Strip and reopening the borders of the West Bank.

Measures

The crackdown was the latest in a series of increasingly harsh economic and security measures employed by authorities in an attempt to end the anti-Israeli violence, which has left at least 123 Palestinians dead and hundreds injured.

One Israeli soldier has been shot to death by an unknown gunman.

Large sections of the West Bank were closed today, preventing reporters from entering, in anticipation of more violence after Friday prayers. But despite the Army's efforts, violent demonstrations were reported in at least 17 villages and UN-run refugee camps.

In the village of Idna, soldiers shot and killed two Palestinians after an Army patrol was attacked by residents throwing rocks, iron rods and Molotov cocktails, an Army spokesman said. Fifteen other people were wounded, the spokesman said.

Palestinian sources said the killings occurred after soldiers entered the mosque grounds to break up a demonstration. Ismail Khali Tamizi, 20, was killed when a tear gas canister fired by a soldier struck him in the head, and Is'haq Nimer Salimiy, 18, was shot five times in the chest, the sources said.

Mideast peace effort

Shultz will accept tentative support

ROME, April 1, (Reuters): US Secretary of State George Shultz, trying to win support for a new Middle East peace plan, said today he would be happy if regional leaders gave even tentative signs of willingness to endorse it.

Shultz, who in February said he hoped for definitive replies from Israel, Jordan, and other key parties by mid-March, suggested his expectations were now much less ambitious.

"Of course, we'd like people to say yes... and if they can't say yes, they can say maybe or they can say if somebody else will do something," he said.

Mission

Shultz spoke to reporters en route to Rome, where he planned to confer with President Francesco Cossiga, caretaker Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti and Pope John Paul before embarking on Sunday on his second peace mission to the Middle East in a month.

He will visit Israel, Jordan, Syria, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

The new US Middle East initiative was launched two months ago in response to unprecedented Palestinian

The sources charged that soldiers killed four Arabs in West Bank clashes yesterday, when the territory was closed to reporters, and a fifth man wounded by troops on Wednesday died of his injuries.

The Army confirmed two deaths yesterday and said the others were under investigation.

The deaths yesterday brought to nine the number of Palestinians killed by soldiers while the West Bank and Gaza were sealed off to non-residents, including reporters. More than 100 Arabs were wounded in the unsuccessful attempt to prevent violence during mass Arab protests that occurred on Wednesday.

In interviews published in two newspapers, Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin warned the West Bank and Gaza could be sealed off again if rioting continues.

He also threatened to rescind the Israeli work permits of Palestinians involved in riots. About 100,000 West Bank and Gaza residents travel to jobs inside Israel every day.

Even after the restrictions were lifted on the territories, more than 25 villages and refugee camps remained under curfew or were declared closed military zones.

A nightly 10 pm-to-3 am curfew in Gaza, imposed March 14 after hundreds of Arab policemen heeded calls from protest leaders and resigned, also was still in place.

Deployed

Hundreds of soldiers and police were deployed in Jerusalem today as thousands of Christian pilgrims poured into the walled old city for Good Friday services and Jews began celebrating Passover.

An Israeli soldier was lightly wounded when an Arab man stabbed him near the Lion's Gate. The assailant was arrested, police said.

In what has become a weekly event, about 200 Arab women and children raised a Palestinian flag and chanted anti-Israel slogans after Friday prayers on the Temple Mount.

Police did not intervene and the protest ended peacefully.

Underground leaders of the uprising have called for three days of riots to protest US Secretary of State George Shultz's visit next week.

Arab leaders told an emergency meeting of the UN Security Council on Wednesday that Israel's crackdown in the occupied territories was fuelling the Palestinian uprising, and called for an international peace conference on the Middle East.

Man kills daughter

A 70-year-old man stabbed his 30-year-old daughter in Rawda on Thursday night. The woman died before reaching hospital. Police in Adelyah are investigating the crime.

Mutiny on Iranian gunboat

WASHINGTON, April 1, (AP): An Iranian gunboat was taken into custody last weekend by Oman after an incident at sea during which the boat's skipper was killed in an apparent mutiny, US Defence Department officials said yesterday.

The officials, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified, said a lone surviving Iranian crewman remained in Omani custody and that the body of the gunboat's skipper had been recovered.

The sources stressed that details of the incident were still sketchy, primarily because the Omani government had yet to share much information.

Refused

But the officials said it appeared the captain was shot and killed by the surviving crewman after tossing a second crewman overboard to his death.

A preliminary intelligence report suggests the altercation began when the two crewmen refused the captain's order to mount an attack on a nearby commercial ship, one source added.

Saudis deny they want US ambassador replaced

RIYADH, April 1, (AP): Saudi Arabia denied today that it had requested the replacement of US Ambassador Hume A. Horan, as reported by the Washington Post newspaper.

The paper, quoting unidentified State Department officials, said the request was made after the ambassador delivered a US complaint over the Saudi purchase of Chinese-made intermediate surface-to-surface missiles.

The official Saudi Press agency, quoting what it described as a responsible source, said the report was "totally devoid of any truth."

Return

"Since he came to the kingdom, the American ambassador has been held in esteem by the Saudi officials," the unnamed source told the agency.

"Transfer of United States ambassadors is a matter that concerns the American government," the source added.

Horan, who was named to Riyadh less than a year ago, is currently back home for consultations on a number of issues. News that he might not return has raised eyebrows among the Western community in the capital, but many conceded that they could not tell whether there was any truth in newspaper report.

Acquisition of the Chinese missiles by Saudi Arabia, a close Arab friend of the United States, was only recently disclosed and it grew into a major issue after Israel expressed concern. The missiles have a range of about 3,000 kms (1,850 miles).

The missiles can reach Israel, with which Saudi Arabia is theoretically in a state of war, and are capable of carrying nuclear warheads. Both Saudi Arabia and China have assured the United States such warheads won't be fitted.

State Department officials told the Post that Horan, who took his post in Saudi Arabia in September, would not be going back, but denied he had been declared persona non grata.

The Post said US Middle East experts had said it was the first time an American ambassador had been withdrawn at Saudi request since the countries established diplomatic relations in 1933.

Secretary of State George Shultz, who left yesterday for visits to Italy and the Middle East, was scheduled to visit Saudi Arabia next week when the issue of the Chinese missiles was expected to be discussed.

Shultz already expressed US concern about the sale of the CSS-2 rockets to the Saudis when he spoke in Washington earlier last month with China's Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian.

41 mines destroyed in Gulf

MANAMA, April 1, (Agencies): The US Navy has found and destroyed 41 mines in the Gulf since its sweeping operations began last year, including 13 in the past three months, a military spokesman said today.

The updated figure doubles the number of mines previously reported to have been destroyed by the Americans. In late November, after the Navy's Korean war-vintage ocean mine sweepers went into action and quickly found 15 mines in the northern Gulf, commanders reported the mine threat was "under control."

When asked about the current situation, the Navy said today through its spokesman that "our mine countermeasure force is well suited for the requirements at hand."

The Navy's report said the mines most recently found were "heavily encrusted with marine vegetation," indicating they had been in the water for months.

US officers have refused to say whether they have found evidence of any recent mine-laying activity by Iran.

Iraq declares 3-day truce in war of cities

NICOSIA, April 1, (Agencies): Iraq said it fired two missiles into Kirkuk, Iraq's northern oil capital, early today after Iraq declared it would halt missile strikes on Iranian cities for three days while Turkey's prime minister visited Baghdad.

Iraq said many civilians were killed or wounded in the Kirkuk. Baghdad's Iraqi News Agency did not announce any retaliation. A three-day truce in the "war of the cities," which was announced by Iraq and began at midnight Thursday, appeared largely to be holding.

The Iraqis said they were ceasing the warplane and missile raids on Iran's cities as a courtesy to Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, who arrived in Baghdad today.

A press photographer reported from Kurdistan that Iran's Revolutionary Guards were pushing westward into the strategic region in an offensive first launched March 16.

The Iranian agency said Iraqi warplanes dropped bombs on the Qara Daghi region of northeast Iraq on March 21-26.

It quoted Iranian-backed Kurdish guerrilla sources as saying the villages of Susiyan, Doukan, Balakha, Jafaran and Olivan were hit.

The Iraqi News Agency only reported one missile hitting Kirkuk.

TNA said the missile exploded in a residential district, killing or wounding "many civilians, including women and children."

Both sides have lobbed more than 250 missiles into each other's cities since Feb 19, killing hundreds of civilians.

Salvage teams in Dubai today patched holes blasted in a Greek-owned supertanker by an Iranian frigate in one of Tehran's fiercest attacks on Gulf shipping.

Shipping sources said the 232,000-tonne Haven, which was shelled repeatedly off Dubai yesterday and ran aground in flames, might be refloated in several days after shell-holes have been patched and some of its oil pumped to another ship.

Sikhs kill 35 in day of violence

Bloodbath in Punjab

PANGOTA, India, April 1, (Agencies): Suspected Sikh militants shot and killed 35 people, including 14 women and seven children, in the bloodiest single day of violence this year in troubled Punjab state, police and witnesses said today.

The killings brought the number of people killed in such attacks this week to more than 80 and prompted police in Amritsar to impose night curfews in parts of the district.

In New Delhi, the federal capital, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi ordered new police alerts in five states that adjoin Punjab.

Visit

Rajiv also met government officials of the Home Ministry and ordered stringent steps to curb Sikh violence, United News of India reported.

Rajiv ordered the governor of Punjab to visit violence-torn areas and to report by tomorrow as politicians said he was close to imposing a state of emergency on the state.

Rajiv was due to visit north-east India tomorrow but All-India Radio said he would shorten his visit to chair a top-level meeting in New Delhi later in the day, at which Punjab Governor Siddhartha Shankar Ray would give his report.

The move toward the declaration, which would drastically curtail civil rights in the north-west Indian state, came after a day of extremist violence.

Yesterday's attacks came hours after an umbrella organisation spearheading the movement to establish a Sikh homeland in Punjab state called for an end to killings of moderate Sikhs.

Most of the killings have been near Amritsar, the site of the Golden Temple, the Sikhs' holiest shrine and a centre for militants. Most of the victims were Hindus, India's religious majority, but minority in Punjab.

Authorities blamed the latest spate of violence on differences within militant groups and attempts to sabotage government moves to reach an accord with militants. At least 330 of the 618 people killed this year in attacks blamed on the militants have been Sikhs who do not support the demand for an independent Sikh homeland.

Dragged

Eighteen people died in a hamlet outside Pangota, 40 kilometres (25 miles) north of Amritsar. 12 militants stormed the huts of a Hindu work commune, local police officer S.S. Virk said. Fifteen of the victims were dragged out of their homes at gunpoint, lined up in a courtyard and shot, he said.

The gunmen also killed a pregnant woman, her six-month-old daughter and her 80-year-old mother-in-law at their home, Virk said.

At Shaeed village, 10 kilometres (six miles) west of Pangota, another group of militants gunned down six Hindus, including three women and a two-year-old boy.

400,000 books burned in Soviet fire

MOSCOW, April 1, (AP): The head of the Soviet culture fund described a fire that burned 400,000 old books and periodicals as a "national disaster" and bitterly criticised library administrators for trying to hide the loss.

Historian Dmitri Likhachev, a widely respected 81-year-old scholar, demanded that the director and deputy director of the Academy of Science Library in Leningrad be fired for lying about the size of the loss and delaying serious restoration work.

His comments were in a page-long article published in March 18 edition of the weekly Knizhnoye Obozreniye, which the Associated Press obtained today.

Disaster

The Feb 14 fire "can rightly be called a national disaster," Likhachev said. "Our culture has suffered a huge loss."

The Academy of Science Library began collecting books, manuscripts and periodicals in 1714, and for more than 200 years was located in a building on Leningrad's Vasiliyevsky island. In the 1920s it was moved to a new building built especially for it on the island.

Likhachev's article was the most serious and alarming of several that have appeared in the Soviet press since the fire, and was particularly striking for its bitter tone.

Violin fetches £473,000

LONDON, April 1, (AP): A 1709 Stradivarius named in honour of English concert violinist Marie Hall fetched £473,000 ($889,240) at a Sotheby's sale yesterday, the highest auction price ever paid for a musical instrument.

The violin, acquired by Marie Hall in 1905, was bought by an unidentified South American dealer, Sotheby's reported. The dealer beat out two other foreign rivals bidding by telephone in a tense, two-minute auction.

The previous highest auction price for a violin by Italian craftsman Antonio Stradivari was £440,000 ($728,000).

ISLAMABAD, April 1, (AP): Authorities have recovered 39 bodies from an avalanche that crushed a remote mountain village earlier this week in northern Pakistan, the government-run Associated Press of Pakistan reported today.

McMahon dies

SYDNEY, April 1, (AP): Sir William McMahon, a former prime minister, died yesterday after a long battle with cancer. He was 80.

officer Anita Stockman said last night that she was unaware of the Saudi request.

Saudi Arabia, an ally of Iraq's, says it needed the missiles to protect itself in case of a further escalation in the Iran-Iraq war, especially in view of Iranian threats.

But US officials say the Saudis bought the missiles in frustration over repeated attempts by the US Congress to block American arms sales.

The kingdom began negotiating the deal with the Chinese in 1985, after Congress blocked the sale of 48 F-15 jet fighters to Saudi Arabia. Congress late last year agreed to sell the Saudis 24 F-15s in order to maintain Saudi air strength at its current levels.

The CSS-2 rockets, US officials say, are not yet operational.

In London, British Foreign Office Minister David Mello and Kuwaiti Oil Minister Sheikh Ali Al Khalifa have discussed Saudi Arabia's purchase of the missiles, a Foreign Office spokesman said yesterday.

Meanwhile, Bahrain and Pakistan said Saudi Arabia by acquiring the Chinese missiles for defence of its national security had exercised its sovereign right which cannot be challenged.

He probably will meet later in his visit with President Saddam Hussein. Ozal reportedly will leave on Sunday evening.

Abducted businessman escapes in London

LONDON, April 1, (AP): A Lebanese businessman escaped from kidnappers who kept him prisoner in a rural bungalow for 24 hours and demanded 5 million Swiss francs ($3.7 million) for his release, Scotland Yard said today.

Telephone calls demanding payment of the ransom were made to the home of Ramzi Ata Dalloul for 15 hours after he escaped, apparently by members of the kidnap gang who were unaware that he had gotten away, police said.

Anti-terrorist squad detectives arrested a man who accompanied 52-year-old Dalloul to his home in London's fashionable Kensington district on Wednesday night and were still questioning him today.

Unharmed

Scotland Yard refused to comment on British media reports that Dalloul had persuaded the man, who was his only guard at the time, to help him escape.

Police said they were looking for at least four other men in connection with the kidnapping.

Dalloul, managing director of Rad Projects and Developments, which is a management consulting firm, was unharmed but shaken by the ordeal.

He was kidnapped on Tuesday night after his car was rammed on the way home from his office in London's West End.

During an argument over who was responsible, police said, a man wearing dark blue slacks and a dark blue sweater whom Dalloul wrongly assumed to be a police officer arrived on the scene and suggested that he sit in the other car while the matter was sorted out.

"He did so and was immediately threatened by a number of men and forced to the floor in the rear of the car and threatened with an object, possibly a gun, which was held to his temple," a police statement said.

Dalloul was driven in the car for about 15 minutes before being bundled into the back of a white van and tied up. He was then taken to a bungalow in Tenterden, Kent, about 40 miles (64 km) southeast of London, where he was handcuffed while one man kept guard. The others left, police said.

Filipinos mark Good
Friday with crucifixion

SAN PEDRO CUTUD, Philippines, April 1, (Agencies): Christians all over the world today commemorate Good Friday, the anniversary of Jesus' crucifixion.

Thousands of Filipinos celebrated Good Friday by beating their backs bloody with crude whips or dragging huge wooden crosses, and some had themselves crucified.

Roman Catholic church leader in Asia's only predominantly Christian country from on the annual and Easter ordeal but the tradition goes on in hundreds of towns and rural communities to commemorate the death of Jesus Christ.

In the village of San Pedro Cutud, in Pampanga province, about 80 km (50 miles) north of Manila, a crowd of 5,000 watched four men being crucified, including one, Mario Castro, who had gone through the ritual nine years in a row.

In a nearby town, a woman was nailed to the cross for the 12th straight year.

Tradition

For Chito Sangala, one of the four men crucified at San Pedro Cutud, it was the first time.

"I do it because I love my mother and want God to make her better," said the 28-year-old fish vendor.

"For eight years, I flagellated myself but she still got sick. So I decided to be crucified so she would get better once and for all."

Villagers say the Philippines' first crucifixion was in San Pedro Cutud in 1962 but the tradition of flagellants marching through the streets barefoot, wearing hoods and thorn crowns dates back to the arrival of Spanish missionaries in the 1500s.

In Rome, Pope John Paul washed and kissed the feet of 12 elderly priests yesterday in a ritual commemorating Christ's gesture on humility toward his apostles at the Last Supper on the night before he was crucified.

Kissed

The Pope poured water on, dried and kissed the right foot of each of the priests from the diocese of Rome during the Holy Thursday mass in Rome's basilica of St John in Lateran, his cathedral church in his capacity as Bishop of Rome.

In occupied Jerusalem hundreds of Christian pilgrims crowded the narrow streets of the old city, carrying wooden crosses and singing psalms along the Via Dolorosa to commemorate Good Friday.

Authorities hit Sicilian Mafia drug ring

130 detained in US and Italy

WASHINGTON, April 1, (Agencies): American and Italian authorities arrested more than 130 people in connection with an investigation into a Mafia drug ring that used cocaine from the United States to buy heroin in Italy for return to US markets, officials said.

The FBI said that 69 people had been arrested in the United States and 68 in Italy by midday yesterday. Authorities said 96 others were being sought by Italian authorities.

Attorney General Edwin Meese III called it "the largest international drug case ever developed by the Department of Justice." He said it would have a "significant impact on heroin imports into this country from Italy."

Meese said the investigation uncovered a Sicilian Mafia plan in which cocaine was exported from different points in the United States to Switzerland and Italy. From those countries, it was exchanged for a southwest Asian heroin that then was smuggled back to the United States, he said.

Attempt

"This is one of the few situations in which there was an attempt to set up a barter economy in drugs," the attorney general said.

The exchange was profitable because cocaine is less expensive in the United States than in Italy, while heroin is cheaper in Italy than the United States. Two kilograms of cocaine can be exchanged for one kilogram of heroin in Italy, FBI spokesman Gregory Jones said. A kilogram equals about 2.2 pounds.

US authorities seized six kilograms of heroin and four kilograms of cocaine during the course of the investigation. Italian authorities seized 22 kilograms of heroin last month.

The investigation began two years ago and grew out of a 1985 drug case that came to be called the "Pizza Connection," which grew out of an FBI investigation of the Bonanno Mafia family in New York. Thirty-five members of the Sicilian Mafia were indicted in New York as a result of the "Pizza Connection" investigation.

Skills

In Bangkok, narcotics officials said today that American drug dealers are lending their entrepreneurial skills to Thailand's blossoming marijuana trade, providing money, transportation and streamlined processing to help farmers boost their illicit production.

"A lot of Thailand's marijuana is produced with US technical assistance, and it is one of the areas where our transfer of technology and private entrepreneurship is the best," a Western narcotics official said.

"American marijuana dealers come over to Thailand, provide money, seed, fertilizer and induce Thai farmers to grow marijuana," said the official, who asked not to be identified.

Maj Gen Chawari Yodmani, head of the Thai office of Narcotics Control Board, agreed that outside assistance may be boosting production.

BEIJING, April 1, (AP): For about $3,000, Japanese tourists can see the Great Wall, eat Peking duck and grow hair with Zhao Zhangguang's magic hair-restoring potion.

Ninety-eight bald and thin-haired Japanese arrived today by bus at Zhao's clinic at the Jinsong hospital in eastern Beijing for their first treatment with 101 hair liniment, a liquid made from 30 secret herbal medicines.

They are the second Japanese group, following 20 who arrived in February, to come to China on a 388,000-yen ($3,100) package tour that includes treatment at the clinic.

Among the first 20, "some have already started to grow hair," said Kenichi Morita, President of China-Japan treatment headquarters, a private Tokyo medical firm sponsoring the tours.

Most of the Japanese said they had signed up for the trip after reading in newspapers about 101, which Zhao, a former farmer with only six years of formal education, developed after 10 years of private research.

Dr. Liu Qirong, the chief of 12 dermatologists at the clinic, said they have treated about 2,700

Chinese in the past year, with 92 per cent showing some new growth of hair. For people who have lost hair in patches, the success rate is 100 per cent, she said.

According to the official news agency Xinhua, more than 100,000 people have been treated with 101 since production began a year ago, with an improvement rate of 97.5 per cent and a cure rate of 84 per cent.

Cleaning

The liniment, Liu said, works by stimulating circulation of the blood and cleaning out hair follicles. A second medicine, 102, is available to ensure that the new head of hair will not fall out in the future.

One slightly balding, 40-year-old man from Osaka, Japan, said he read about the cure in a magazine and decided to join the tour because "it's better to have hair than not to have hair."

But for some it is more serious. Yuki Matsushita, a 6-year-old from Fukuoka, lost all his hair 18 months ago, and Japanese doctors have had no success in either identifying or solving the problem, his grandmother Yoshie Kuga said.

"We have high hopes. Nothing else has worked," she said.

7 killed, 18 hurt in blast near Afghan border

ISLAMABAD, April 1, (AP): A bomb deposited in a poultry shop near the Afghan border exploded, killing seven people and injuring 18, the official government newspaper reported today.

Also yesterday, two other people were killed and two were wounded in another frontier village by incoming Afghan artillery rounds, the English-language Pakistan Times said.

The bombing occurred in the northwestern village of Sadda when a man purchased a hen then asked the shop owner to keep the bird and a parcel for him while he finished his shopping, the Times said.

The man has not been apprehended and no group claimed responsibility, the paper said. Pakistani officials have blamed a series of terrorist bombings over the past two years on agents of Afghanistan's Soviet-backed government.

Fighting

Pakistan supports the guerrillas fighting that government and shelters about 3.5 million Afghan refugees.

The shelling occurred in a village identified as Ghakh, the Times said.

Cross-border shelling and aerial bombings have been frequent in the 10-year-old Afghan war.

Both of yesterday's attacks occurred in semi-autonomous districts ruled by Pashtun tribal clans that are normally off limits to Pakistani police and military. They are also the main staging areas for Afghan guerrillas.

2 die in US fighter
crash

KARLSRUHE, West Germany, April 1, (Agencies): A US Air Force fighter plane crashed into the centre of the West German village of Forst yesterday, killing the pilot and at least one resident, officials said.

The head of the regional council in Karlsruhe, 10 km (six miles) from the crash site, said firemen dug out the body of a local inhabitant from the debris of a burnt house.

The body of the pilot had been found earlier.

West German television quoted officials as saying they could not rule out finding more bodies in the remains of at least four houses destroyed in the crash.

The television report said an eyewitness described the scene as a "field of rubble."

The plane was believed to have hit the roofs of several buildings before falling to the ground in a residential area of the village, which has a population of about 6,000.

The wreckage of the plane was emitting hydrogen, a poisonous fuel gas, and inhabitants from more than 40 houses had been evacuated, a police spokesman said.

On Wednesday the French Mirage crashed in a woods about 50 miles (80 km) northeast of Munich, killing the pilot. The crash site was about 1.2 miles (2 kilometres) from a nuclear power plant.

Franz Peter Basten, deputy interior minister in Rheinland Palatinate said there is a nuclear power plant outside Karlsruhe, 11 miles (18 km) southwest of Forst.

Move to remove major obstacle to Afghan settlement

US seeks accord on aid to rivals

ROME, April 1. (AP): In a strategic shift, US Secretary of State George Shultz said today he is seeking arrangements with the Soviet Union for continuing US and Soviet military aid to rival factions in Afghanistan.

The intent would be to remove the only major obstacle to a negotiated settlement of the 8-year-old Afghanistan war and the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the country.

The United States would prefer to have a moratorium on military aid, but "to date the Soviets have not wanted to do that," Shultz told reporters while flying to Rome.

Obstacle
Shultz arrived in Rome for talks with Italian officials. He plans to leave Sunday for occupied Jerusalem on a five-day shuttle aimed at encouraging Arab-Israeli negotiations to end Palestinian unrest in Israeli-occupied territories.

In March, Shultz proposed to Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze that both sides declare a moratorium in Afghanistan, to be in effect while the Soviets withdrew their estimated 120,000 troops and for three months afterward.

The Soviets accused the United States of posing a last-minute obstacle to an agreement. Negotiations stalled between Afghanistan and Pakistan, which represents Afghan rebel interests.

The issue of US and Soviet military aid to rival forces has become an impediment to improved superpower relations and a key regional dispute confronting organisers of a May superpower summit in Moscow.

Shultz made it clear he preferred a suspension of Soviet aid to the Marxists and a matching cutoff of US support for the resistance groups. American weapons have included Stinger missiles that were effective against Soviet planes and helicopters.

Restraint
But Shultz said the overall goal was "a balanced outcome." He said there was nothing in the Geneva accords to settle the war "that tells us we cannot support our friends."

"If the Soviets exercise restraint, we are prepared to exercise restraint," he said.

Shultz said he did not know whether the Soviets would go along with the equal levels of aid to the two sides.

But he stressed the United States was prepared to guarantee a settlement even while weapons kept flowing to the combatants.

"If we have signed the accords and see a need to support our friends we will be able to do it," he said.

Shultz said he discussed the idea on the telephone Wednesday with Pakistani Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo and that President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq then called President Ronald Reagan.

Cessation
"So these things are in place," Shultz said. "Where we will all come out remains to be seen."

During talks with Shevardnadze in Washington last month, Shultz renewed a plea for what the United States has been calling a "symmetrical cessation" of superpower aid to the Afghan combatants.

The new proposal, rather than calling for symmetrical cessation of aid, envisions parallel continuation of assistance.

"We now express the policy in terms of 'we will continue aid to the Mujahadeen as long as the Soviet Union continues aid to the Kabul government," US spokesman Fitzwater said.

"The basic point to make is that our policy has not changed in the sense that we will not desert the Afghan rebels," the spokesman said. "We will not cut off money to them as long as the Soviets are providing aid."

Charge
Fitzwater did not explain how the new US language might be more palatable to the Soviets except to say "there are some negotiating reasons why it could help allow the agreement to be signed in Geneva and clear the way for a pullout."

Meanwhile, Afghan President Najibullah accused the West of slowing "in every way" a solution to the Afghan conflict, the official Soviet news agency Tass reported.

Najibullah was quoted as telling a news conference in Kabul on Wednesday this was partly reflected in the indirect peace talks in Geneva between Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Pakistan is haven to about three million Afghan refugees and rebels fighting the Soviet-backed government in Kabul.

Moscow has offered to start withdrawing its troops from Afghanistan if an agreement is reached at the United Nations sponsored talks in Geneva.

But progress has been held up by US-Soviet differences over ending aid to the rebels and the Kabul government.

"If real progress has not been attained by today, the responsibility of this rests squarely with Pakistan and the United States," Tass quoted Najibullah as saying.

He said his "national reconciliation" policy of offering to share power with Western-backed rebels had run into "great difficulties."

An alliance of guerrilla movements based in Pakistan on Wednesday rejected Najibullah's renewed invitation to stand in national assembly elections in April.

The Afghan leader said Western countries continued to supply weapons to the rebels, despite Kabul's unilateral declaration of a ceasefire, and that they were preventing refugees from returning to Afghanistan.

33 extremists go on trial in Cairo

CAIRO, April 1. (Reuter): The trial of 33 Muslim hardliners accused of trying to kill two former ministers and a prominent editor starts tomorrow in the second mass trial since the assassination of President Anwar Sadat.

The prosecution has demanded death sentences for 15 of the defendants, saying they were members of a group calling itself "The Freedom From Hell."

They were charged with resisting arrest and killing a police officer in a gun battle last August. The others face possible prison terms if convicted on lesser charges at the trial in a security court.

Charges against the accused include forming a "paramilitary clandestine terrorist group which brands society as blasphemous and atheist."

Charges

The indictment sheet charged the defendants with attempts to assassinate former Interior Ministers Hassan Abu Basha and Nabawi Ismail, and the editor of the state-owned weekly political review Al-Mussawwar, Makram Mohammed Ahmed.

Police confiscated rifles, pistols, hand grenades, bombs and bullets from the accused.

An elite armed police force ringed the makeshift courtroom, part of an exhibition centre at Nasr City, a Cairo suburb.

A group of 300 members of the Jihad (holy war) organisation whose militants gunned down Sadat during a military parade in October 1981, were also tried in the same courtroom.

In an unprecedented move, judge Omar Al Oteifi, president of a three-member panel hearing the case, called a news conference on Tuesday to announce that special permits would be issued for journalists, relatives as well as lawyers.

Victims

The first victim was Abu Basha, seriously wounded last May 5 when gunmen sprayed his car with a hail of bullets from two sub-machineguns.

Abu Basha, Interior Minister from 1982 to 1984, has played a major role in rounding up Muslim fundamentalists after Sadat was murdered. Hardliners also accuse him of encouraging their persecution.

Carlucci in Morocco for arms talks

MARRAKESH, Morocco, April 1. (Reuter): US Defence Secretary Frank Carlucci arrived in Marrakesh today for a three-day visit to Morocco during which he will discuss military cooperation with King Hassan and other government leaders.

At the start of a tour which will also take him to India, Pakistan and Tunisia, Carlucci said there had been "excellent cooperation" between Morocco and the United States for over 200 years.

Speaking in French, he said he was convinced that political, economic, cultural and military cooperation would continue in the interests of both countries.

Moroccan officials said Carlucci would meet Prime Minister Azeddine Laraki and General Mohammed Achabbbar, secretary-general of the defence administration, and visit military bases.

Morocco and the United States are linked by a military cooperation accord signed in 1982 which expires next May. Under the pact Morocco grants transit facilities for American rapid deployment forces in the event of a crisis in the Gulf.

Foes fail to chalk out anti-Ershad plan

DHAKA, April 1. (Reuter): Bangladeshi opposition parties failed to agree on Thursday on a new strategy to force President Hussain Muhammad Ershad to resign.

Opposition sources said the eight-party alliance led by Sheikh Hasina and the seven-party group headed by Begum Khaleda Zia both felt the need to strengthen their campaign to drive Ershad out by April 8.

"But the undercurrent of difference between Hasina and Khaleda is still holding their followers largely apart," one man said.

Ershad, apparently unmoved by the deadline, reshuffled his cabinet on Sunday and left for a state visit to Thailand the next day.

The reshuffle followed elections on March 3 boycotted by the major opposition parties. The polls, marred by bombings and gunbattles between rival factions in which at least 15 people were killed, gave a landslide victory to Ershad's Jatiya Party.

Campaign

The two opposition alliances said that unless Ershad, a former general who seized power in a 1982 bloodless coup, quits by April 8 he will face a crippling indefinite general strike.

He has already survived a stormy opposition campaign that included 26 days of strikes since November and refuses to step down under pressure.

Opponents also criticise his plans to change the electoral system to end ballot-rigging and to make Islam the state religion.

Indian troops patrol Sri Lankan villages

Tamil rebels kill 17 Muslims

COLOMBO, April 1. (Reuter): Indian troops and Sri Lankan police patrolled two villages in Eastern Sri Lanka today where officials said at least 17 people were killed by Tamil guerrillas.

Police and Indian High Commission officials said 17 bodies had been found after rebels stormed the villages of Mallaiyakadu and Sainamuruthu, about 40 km south of Batticaloa yesterday.

Bodies

Residents said at least 40 people were killed when the rebels went on the rampage, shooting people and burning their houses. Police were unable to confirm the higher figure.

District development council chairman Haniffa Jaupher said by telephone smoke was still rising from dozens of bags of rice set on fire during the attack.

"The two villages, inhabited by Muslims, are deserted. Only Indian soldiers and police are there. People are afraid to return to their homes," he said.

He said about 40 gunmen stormed through the two villages, raiding a mosque, setting fire to at least 100 houses and shooting at random. He said he saw four bodies at a mosque.

Jaupher said about 7,000 people sought shelter in schools while others were staying with relatives.

Denial

He said about 30 people had been injured and were being treated at private hospitals. The dead would be buried at separate funerals today, he said.

Residents said a guerrilla group called "Three Stars" was responsible for the attack and alleged that Indian soldiers did not prevent the violence. "They just looked on," one of them said.

An Indian official denied the charge. He said soldiers rushed to the area when told of the raids, "but by that time the attacks had ended."

More than 50,000 Indian troops have been deployed in the island's North and East to enforce last year's Indo-Sri Lanka accord which was aimed at ending a Tamil revolt for a separate state.

Yesterday's attack was the second raid in a week in the area. Last Saturday, rebels set fire to 25 Muslim-owned shops in Kalmunai, a coastal town 30 km south of Batticaloa, which has a mixed Tamil and Muslim population.

Iranians urged to 'slap' West

NICOSIA, April 1. (Reuter): Iran's spiritual leader Ayatollah Khomeini called on Thursday for stepped up attacks on Iraq to slap the West and blind the Eastern bloc in one stroke.

"The big powers of East and West want to crush you under their dirty boots and in their bloody claws, without you making as much as a sound," he told the Iranian people in a message ahead of next week's parliamentary elections.

"Today is the day of resistance. Slap American and Western arrogance in the face in such a way its flash would blind Eastern arrogance," said the message, read on Tehran Radio.

Iran has accused Washington of supporting Iraq in the 7-1/2-year-old war and Moscow of supplying Baghdad with arms.

The 85-year-old leader said it was time for war, resistance and sacrifice.

"Hesitation today will lead to enslavement tomorrow. One should discard worldly attachments, put on the armour of holy war and resistance, and march on."

Khomeini said Iraqi attacks on Iranian cities could be aimed at stopping people from voting in the elections set for April 8.

"The noble people of Iran will hold the elections as scheduled with a massive turnout, and would go to the polls even if it is attacked by rockets and bombs," Khomeini said.

Rajiv's cousin faces corruption charges

NEW DELHI, April 1. (AP): The government has filed preliminary charges against Arun Nehru, a cousin and former adviser of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi who has since turned political foe of the Indian leader, in connection with alleged corruption in a foreign arms deal, officials said Thursday.

"We have filed a case against Nehru under the Prevention of Corruption Act for ordering defective pistols from Czechoslovakia," said M.G. Katre, director of the Central Bureau of Investigation, which is similar to the American FBI.

Nehru now is a leading member of the "Jan Morcha," or people's front, an opposition group consisting of disgruntled members of Rajiv's Congress Party. He was India's Home Minister when the weapons contract was signed in September 1986.

The 210-million rupee ($16-million) contract is with Mercuria of Czechoslovakia for supply of 55,000 pistols to be used by the Special Protection Group, an elite commando force which guards political leaders, including Rajiv.

Indian newspapers have carried reports that some of the pistols failed to fire when tested. The charge comes after Nehru and other political opponents of Rajiv have accused the government of corruption in connection with various other arms deals.

In a statement issued Thurs-

Arun Nehru said the charge against him stemmed from a "political vendetta" intended to silence criticism against the government.

"Suffice it to say that if the party in power has initiated such proceedings to silence political dissent, they are sadly mistaken. Such puerile and petulant acts only expose their inherent weaknesses," Nehru said in a statement.

Nehru, a member of parliament, was expelled from the ruling Congress Party after political differences with Rajiv last year. He has since joined the "Jan Morcha" led by former Defence Minister V.P. Singh.

Singh resigned after he ordered an investigation into a submarine deal that India had signed with West Germany amid allegations that people close to Rajiv received pay-offs for the contract.

Rashed denounces Israeli measures

PLO stages rally on Land Day

THE Palestine Liberation Organisation staged a rally on Thursday marking the Land Day under the patronage of the Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmed.

The Minister of State for Cabinet Affairs Rashed Abdul Aziz Al Rashed addressed the gathering on behalf of Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmed highly praising the uprising which he said challenged the latest sophisticated military hardware and drove the Israeli occupiers mad at the self-denial and courageous sacrifice of the Palestinian youth.

He pointed out that the more atrocities Israel committed against the unarmed Palestinians the more determined the rightful owners of the land become in bravely defending their home and driving out the occupiers.

The Kuwaiti minister, however, paid tribute to the nations that supported the legitimate Palestinian right and denounced the Israeli barbaric measures, vowing continued assistance to the struggle of the Palestinians for a settlement based on justice and peace under the PLO.

Assistance

Expecting the peace-loving forces in the world to extend all assistance to the uprising to help it keep its present momentum, Rashed specifically signalled out the Arab states as expected today more so than ever before to give political, material, moral and media assistance.

Rashed said Israel was pursuing its aggressive policies against the Palestinians relying on the support it is getting from the forces of evil in the world and from the differences of opinion among the Arabs.

The minister stressed the importance nowadays of the unity of the Arab states assuring the audience that Kuwait has always stated its support for the struggle of the Palestinians to their full national rights.

Finance

Rashed recalled that in his capacity as current chairman of the Organisation of Islamic Conference, HH the Amir urged the Islamic countries to extend all possible assistance to the uprising of the Palestinians assuring the gathering that Kuwait will save no effort at all levels in supporting the brothers in occupied Palestine.

Deputy speaker of the Palestine National Council and member of the Central Committee of Fatah Salim Al Zaanoun spoke assuring the listeners who included Arab ambassadors and a number of prominent citizens, that the uprising will continue unabated even if outside assistance is cut off from it.

The Palestinians are now fighting for the independent state after which they can unite with one or more of the Arab states, he asserted calling on the Palestinian community in the Gulf states to finance studies of over 2,000 Palestinian students in Europe after assistance has been cut off from them.

Others spoke along the same lines of unwavering support for the cause.

KUWAIT PRESS DIGEST

Collective Gulf deterrent measures needed

THE Kuwaiti press on Thursday was sharply critical of the unprovoked Iranian gunboat attack on the Kuwaiti island Bubiyan, and sounded the need for collective Arabian Gulf iron-fist deterrent measures to stop Iranian recklessness.

Al Watan charging that Iran has been seeking to alter the geographical facts of the Gulf region, said the aggression on Bubiyan "formed a fresh link in the chain of political disarray that is a main feature of Iranian policies."

Asserting that no one knows the political gains Iran nets from its recurrent naked aggressions on Kuwait, the paper pointed out that the flagrant attack should further fuel regional tensions.

Al Watan, recalling that previous Iranian aggression on Kuwaiti oil tankers and water borders had only invoked loud condemnations, strongly called for "new methods and means for confronting the new situation."

Plot to divert attention from uprising

STRIKING a different note, the daily "Al Rai Al Aam" suggested that the grave Iranian raid on Bubiyan came in the framework of superpower plots to divert attention from the popular Palestinian uprising against the Israeli occupation of Arab land.

The paper pointed out that Iran relitigated skirmishes with neighbours everytime Iraqi military pressures on Tehran mounted and left it with no option but desperation and failure.

The daily added that Iran's recalcitrant prosecution of the war with Iraq and its persistent attempts to drag neutral Arab states into the conflict provide only one conclusion — that survival of the Iranian regime hinges on creating troubles and crises.

Al Rai Al Aam charged that Iran is seeking to set the whole Gulf region afire at a time when the Arab states are doing their best to halt the Iran-Iraq war and mend fences with Tehran.

Iran-Israel collusion

IN A strongly worded front-page editorial, the daily Al Anba noted that "Iran and Israel are the two faces of a bad coin," and expressed belief that "any wicked deliberate aggression or provocation should be confronted with decisive action."

Al Anba charged that since coming to power in 1979, the present Iranian regime has been resorting to a variety of gimmicks and manoeuvres to hide its real bad schemes.

The paper stressed that this latest Iranian aggression "affirmed the flagrant collusion between Iran and Israel that targets the Arab nation."

GULF PRESS

Solidarity with Kuwait and Saudi Arabia

UNITED Arab Emirates newspapers said an Iranian attack on Kuwait's Bubiyan island would increase tension and lead to a serious escalation in the Gulf.

Al Itihad praised the UAE's solidarity with Kuwait as well as Saudi Arabia in face of Israeli threats.

"The UAE in declaring its solidarity with Kuwait and Saudi Arabia illustrates the policy forged by President Sheikh Zayed Bin Sultan Al Nahyan," it said.

But it said the UAE has always been keen to overt any act that might increase tension through its peace bids designed to bring about peace and security in the region.

"The UAE's support for Kuwait and Saudi Arabia also reflects the real concept of Arab solidarity and Gulf Cooperation," it said.

Al Wahda daily said it is not in the interest of anybody to expand the scope of the Iraq-Iran war. "That would mean an expansion in the scope of danger and consequently the collapse of all opportunities to achieve peace and stability," it said.

The Iranian aggression on the Kuwaiti island, it said, constituted a serious escalation because Kuwait has been neutral since the conflict broke out and has been, along with its brothers in the Gulf and the Organisation of Islamic Conference, exerting efforts to find a peaceful settlement to the war.

Soviet-made anti-aircraft missile found on Iranian boat

TWO portable anti-aircraft missiles, tentatively identified as Soviet-made SAM-7s, were found aboard an Iranian gunboat recovered by the US Navy last week, a US military official in the Gulf said on Thursday.

Weapons on the boat, found abandoned and drifting in the Strait of Hormuz, also included three "Chaff" rockets of unknown origin and four other unidentified rockets with fusing devices, a spokesman for the US Central Command said.

Army Major Barry Willey, the spokesman, told reporters in a US Defence Department pool in the region that a twin-barrel gun mounted in the cockpit of the 30-foot boat was a Soviet-made ZSU 23 mm anti-aircraft weapon.

Modern

The gun, rusty but functional and loaded for firing when found, apparently had been used for attacks on merchant shipping in the southern Gulf and the Strait, Willey said.

He said he did not know whether the SAM-7s, which are not the most modern Soviet anti-aircraft weapons, had previously been used in the Gulf.

The Iranian boat, an open cockpit, twin-diesel craft, was found by the US guided missile frigate Reuben James, drifting in stormy 10-foot (three-metre) seas in the Hormuz passage last Thursday.

US officers have said they do not know why the boat apparently was abandoned by the Iranians although seas were running very high. It apparently had been recently vacated by its crew and was trailing a sea anchor.

Whereabouts

The Reuben James took the boat in tow and later passed it on to another warship, Willey would not divulge the boat's whereabouts but said it was "in custody of the US Navy."

The fiberglass-hulled boat was the fourth Iranian small craft captured by the Navy in the Gulf in the past six months.

In addition to the rockets and missiles, Willey said, the boat yielded one Soviet-designed AK-47 assault rifle and 203 rounds of ammunition, 500 rounds of ammunition for the mounted gun, and related items.

The missiles believed to be SAM-7s apparently were contained in a sealed wooden box, six feet (1.82 metres) long by two feet (0.6 metres) square, found in the bottom of the boat.

Speculation

Officers on the Reuben James did not open the box, but there was speculation at the time it might contain US-built Stinger anti-aircraft missiles or other portable rockets.

US officials gave no further information on the "Chaff" rockets found on the Iranian boat.

Carried aboard most warships and aircraft in the Gulf, Chaff is composed of shards of metal blown into the air to confuse the homing system of a radar-guided missile.

US media highlight Iran's aggression

WASHINGTON, April 1, (Kuna): The American media on Thursday highlighted Iran's latest aggression against Kuwait and a number of newspapers pointed out Kuwait's exercising of self-restraint despite the attack in which two Kuwaiti soldiers were injured.

The papers also highlighted the expressions of support that Kuwait has been receiving from many countries around the world, including letters of support sent from Saudi Arabia, Jordan, and Egypt who condemned the attack on the island of Bubiyan.

In its report, the New York Times noted the statement that Kuwait's Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmed issued in which he expressed the hope that the attack would remain "just an isolated incident." Kuwait on Wednesday submitted a protest of the attack to Iran and at the United Nations.

The paper noted the fact that Iran "has repeatedly attacked Kuwait in recent years, including the launching of Chinese-made Silkworm missiles and attacks by Iranian gunboats on Kuwaiti oil tankers."

The Washington Times newspaper had an eight-column headline reading, "Kuwait attacked by Iranian forces for the first time."

The paper quoted from a statement issued by Saudi Arabia which condemned and denounced the attack on Kuwait.

A former National Security Council adviser, Gary Sick, who is an expert on the Gulf, said in a national public radio interview that the attack was significant because of the strategic position of the island of Bubiyan, but he predicted that he did not expect a further escalation in the Gulf conflict as a result of the attack on Kuwait.

He noted the fact that Kuwait had made it a point to maintain a dialogue with Iran in recent months.

Additional duty

DEFENCE Minister Sheikh Nawaf Al Ahmed yesterday issued a decision, by which Assistant Undersecretary for legal and administrative affairs Hmoud Mohammed Al Otaibi is commissioned with the tasks of the undersecretary during his mission abroad.

Zia may brief OIC leaders on Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, April 1, (AP): President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq may brief Muslim leaders on Afghanistan at an Organisation of Islamic Conference mini-summit April 10 in Kuwait, a newspaper reported yesterday.

The English-language paper the Muslim quoted unidentified sources as saying the summit will be held in the wake of recent Israeli threats to Saudi Arabia against its acquiring Chinese missiles, and of the intensification of Iran-Iraq's "war of the cities."

Foreign ministry spokesmen declined comment on the report. The newspaper said Zia would participate in Middle East discussions and also use the two days to brief Muslim leaders individually on Afghanistan.

Pakistan and Afghanistan's Soviet-backed government are in their fifth week of negotiations at Geneva, Switzerland, over an end to Afghanistan's 10-year civil war, including a withdrawal of an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops.

Islamabad backs Afghan Muslim insurgents and cares for some 3.5 million Afghan refugees living inside Pakistan.

Zia is scheduled to address a joint session of parliament on April 7. Afghanistan is expected to figure prominently in his speech.

Soviet delegation visits UAE

ABU DHABI, April 1, (Kuna): A special mission of the USSR Supreme Soviet, led by Vice-President of the Praesidium, Georgy Tarashevich arrived in the United Arab Emirates last night on the first leg of a Gulf tour.

In an arrival statement reported by the United Arab Emirates news agency Tarashevich expressed pleasure at his visit and pointed out that his exchanges with UAE officials would tackle a wide-range of pressing international issues.

Talks

Official talks are slated to start Saturday morning between the Soviet delegation and officials at the National Federal Council (the appointed parliament).

The Soviet mission is also due to confer with UAE Minister of Information Ahmed Bin Hamad.

The exchanges are expected to centre on the need to halt the Iran-Iraq dispute and its offshoot conflicts, the so-called tanker war and war of cities.

The four-month old popular Palestinian uprising against Israeli occupation and oppression is also expected to feature prominently in the talks.

Bilateral relations and means of boosting them, particularly in the fields of parliamentary affairs and information would also figure in the discussions.

The Soviet mission also comprises the director general of official Soviet News Agency Tass, Sergei Losiv and the secretary-general of Soviet Writers Association, Mobobitshu Kanatov.

The delegation would be visiting Kuwait and possibly Oman. These are the only three countries in the Gulf Cooperation Council that maintain diplomatic relations with Moscow.

Bahrain appoints new defence minister

MANAMA, April 1, (AP): Bahrain announced yesterday the creation of a Supreme Defence Council and the appointment of a defence minister, a portfolio that had been held to date by the Crown Prince and Commander-in-Chief of the Bahrain defence forces.

Decrees to this effect were issued by the Amir of Bahrain, Sheikh Issa Bin Salman Al Khalifa, the Gulf News Agency reported.

The decisions marked a further step in the development of Bahrain's growing military force.

The small island state, which has a population of less than half a million, is in line for 12 F-16s from the United States. In 1985, Bahrain acquired its first fixed-wing aircraft — 12 US-built F-5E jets.

In the past year, it has taken delivery of 54 M-60 tanks, along with associated equipment and spare parts, as well as training programmes.

The F-16 contract, approved by President Reagan in January 1987, marked the first time the United States agreed to sell the sophisticated aircraft to any Arab nation in the Gulf. The 400-million-dollar deal involves missiles, radar receivers and other gear.

Bahrain also has beefed up its naval forces with German-made gunboats, equipped with Exocet and Harpoon missiles.

The decree on the Supreme Defence Council was published in the official gazette, GNA said. But its composition was not disclosed.

GNA reported that separate royal decrees named the Chief of Staff, Staff Gen. Sheikh Khalifa Bin Ahmed Al Khalifa, defence minister. His assistant, Staff Brig. Sheikh Abdullah Bin Salman Al Khalifa, became chief of staff.

The new defence minister will be deputy to the Commander in Chief, Crown Prince Sheikh Hamad Bin Issa Al Khalifa.

diplomats from Tehran last July when protesters stormed its embassy after hundreds of Iranian pilgrims died in clashes with Saudi security forces in Makkah.

But since January, tensions have eased. Of 13 Iranian attacks on Gulf shipping this month, only two were on ships bound to or from Kuwait.

Qatar, Bahrain, UAE and N. Yemen have denounced the attack and Arab League

Secretary General Chedli Klibi has also condemned the aggression.

In Tunis, participants at the 89th session of the Arab League ministerial council today denounced the Iranian aggression on the Kuwaiti island of Bubiyan last Wednesday.

The council, in a communique issued at the third closed session, affirmed its full backing of Kuwait, saying that the use of force and threat escalates the tension and hinders international efforts to establish peace and stability in the region.

Minister relieved

BAGHDAD, April 1, (AP): President Saddam Hussein yesterday relieved of his job the Construction and Housing Minister, Mohammed Fedhi Hussein, state-run television reported.

A presidential decree read over television did not give reasons for the minister's removal or say whether he was appointed to a different job.

He was replaced by the ministry's undersecretary, Taher Mohammed Al Marzouk. Both Hussein and Al Marzouk are engineers.

Earlier this month, Hussein relieved from their jobs the Minister of Light Industry, and the Minister of Heavy Industry.

US arms sales to Middle East

WASHINGTON, April 1, (UPI): The administration has approved $5.4 billion in arms sales to Middle East countries, including 75 F-16 fighters to Israel and a variety of weapons systems to Saudi Arabia, administration sources say.

In addition to notifying Congress informally last week of a proposed $2.1 billion sale to Egypt of the technology and equipment to build 550 M-1 front-line tanks over the next 10 years, the sources said yesterday informal notification was given of a proposed $2 billion sale of 75 F-16 fighter planes to Israel.

Justice ministers meeting opens today

HH the Amir patronises the inauguration ceremony today of the sixth session of the council of Arab justice ministers at the Conference Centre.

Omani Justice Minister Helal Bin Saud Al Bosaeidi and his UAE opposite number Abdulla Bin Hameed Al Mazroui arrived yesterday to take part in the conference.

Qatari Minister of Social Affairs and Labour Ali Bin Ahmed Al Ansari and his accompanying delegation arrived here for the same purpose.

The ministers were received by the Minister of Justice and Legal Affairs Dhari Al Othman, Secretary-General Mico and members of the Supreme Judiciary Council and a number of ranking Justice Ministry officials.

Earlier, Jordanian Justice Undersecretary Mohammed Saleh Al Sheikh, arrived here to participate in the meetings. He was received by his Kuwaiti counterpart Nasser Hamad Al Roumi and other senior ministry officials.

Justice ministers of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, Iraq and Syria, also have arrived here.

Sheikh Hamad visits UAE

ABU DHABI, April 1, (Kuna): Bahrain's Crown Prince and General Commander of the Armed Forces, Sheikh Hamad Bin Issa Al Khalifa arrived here from Manama today on a brief visit to attend the finals of a camel race.

The race, an annual event in which Arab breeds of camels compete, will also be attended by a personal representative of Sultan Qaboos of Oman, Thuwaini Bin Shihab and Saudi Minister of Housing Prince Mit'eb Bin Abdul Aziz.

Rumaihi calls for efforts to contain war

MOSCOW, April 1, (Kuna): Kuwaiti editor-in-chief of Al Arabi magazine Dr Mohammed Al Rumaihi has said, "wars under the guise of religion are long-term wars", noting such thesis is based on historical evidence.

Speaking at an intellectual meeting with Soviet scientists at the Afro-Asia Institute here, Rumaihi stressed that Islam is a religion of culture and way of life to the Arabs. He pointed out that Arabs do not accept the use of Islam as a political umbrella of violence and terrorism.

He added, "we as Muslims do not accept some of the negative trends in the Soviet press towards Islam."

Theatrical festival

THE first Gulf Cooperation Council theatrical festival comes to a close today with winning participants receiving awards and medals and certificates of appreciation, the festival director Khaled Abdul Latif Ramadan said.

He said the weeklong festivities, which are hoped to be emulated by the other GCC states in the coming years, are attended by Arab critics who highly commended the performance of the troupes.

Oil slick

RAS EL KHAIMAH, UAE, April 1, (Kuna): A huge oil slick which has an area of seven square kilometres appeared off the coasts of Ras El Khaimah.

Smallest copy of the Quran

DUBAI, April 1, (Reuters): Who owns the world's smallest Quran? Claims have been made in Iran, Poland and Yugoslavia but a family in Dubai has one that is even smaller.

Mona Tarsissi said her handwritten, rice-paper volume, measuring 1.8 centimetre (three-quarters of an inch) by 1.4 centimetre (five-eighths of an inch), has been in her Lebanese family for generations.

The red Quran, which she wears in a locket, outdoes a 2.5 centimetre by 1.5 centimetre (one inch by five-eighths of an inch) volume, in Yugoslavia whose owner claimed it as the world's tiniest last week.

"I used to go swimming with the locket round my neck," Tarsissi said this week. "Luckily the Quran was not damaged and I wonder if it might be valuable."

GNA marks 10th anniversary

MANAMA, April 1, (Kuna): The Bahrain-based Gulf News Agency today commemorated its 10th anniversary registering a decade of a responsible role in monitoring and following Gulf, Arab, and world main events.

In a report issued by the agency on the occasion, GNA said the main purpose of its establishment was to continue the concern of the Gulf news in particular and Arab news in general.

The agency, established on April 1st, 1978, following a decade of work in cooperation with sisterly Gulf news agencies, took its natural position as a specialist and mouthpiece of the Gulf states.

GNA with great efforts by its staff, received encouragement from subscribers who never hesitated to call and give advice and suggestions, the report said.

The correct path of children of stones

WHAT do the United States and Israel expect from the pretext that the PLO does not represent the Palestinian people? With whom do they really want to negotiate and reach agreements?

All the Palestinians inside Palestine, including those who met Shultz and others, stressed that the PLO was their sole legitimate representative.

So the question remains: What do the US and Israel actually want?

From the events on Land Day (Wednesday), Israel must have realised that the Palestinian youths and politicians are not the same as the Palestinians of 1952, 1956 or 1967.

These new Palestinians have been greatly affected by events and know how to deal with the world.

Every day large numbers of Palestinians are injured or become martyrs.

Although they can easily get arms to use against the Israeli soldiers, the Palestinians choose to use stones, the same weapon the Jews had used to gain world sympathy when they expelled the Palestinians from their lands.

The youths of the Palestinian uprising managed to obtain the bombs and explosives that blew up the King David Hotel in 1947 and killed scores of British soldiers.

These Palestinian revolutionaries can easily kill many Israeli soldiers every day, but the new Palestinian policy, influenced by experience, does not call for acts such as the explosions at Vienna airport or the assassination of the Israeli ambassador in London. These methods are not wanted any more, the only method now is the throwing of stones at the Israeli occupants.

This is the correct way of demanding their legal rights. It is the proper way for demanding peace and living in harmony by discarding war and fighting.

This is also the demand of the PLO itself, which is recognised by a majority of countries as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

The PLO demands are logical; they do not want to throw Israel into the sea, but want to negotiate through an international peace conference.

The uprising is continuing and increasing day by day.

This time Sharon will commit a grave mistake if he thinks he is in south Lebanon. For four continuous months Sharon could not do anything, and conceded recently that he was being defeated by the "children of stones".

The dreams of Israeli Prime Minister Shamir will certainly lead him to the fate faced by the first Zionist leaders in Germany and other European countries; they became too greedy and paid a heavy price.

At present Israel is the side wasting the peace opportunities.

Wednesday was Land Day, the day of the Palestinian people. The Authority and Control Day will be held after a week, followed by Martyrs Day and many others.

The uprising will continue and Palestinian stones will fill the streets of that blessed land.

Shultz' Mideast peace efforts

Arab-Americans have no high hopes

By Roberta Schur

NEW YORK: On the wall of a Brooklyn grocery store is a picture of a dove drawn in the black, green, red, and white of the Palestinian flag. "Palestine Lives," the caption says. Underneath someone has written "Immortal."

This is a neighbourhood where the nightly newscasts showing violence in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip strike a responsive chord. Many of the viewers are Palestinians who were born in the Israeli-occupied territories and have their own stories to tell.

There is the agony of the Jerusalem-born owner of a grocery store. "Already four people in my family are in jail," he says. He does not know what they are charged with. "You can go to jail for looking at a soldier," he says.

Another store owner tells of his wife's humiliation. On a recent visit to see relatives on the West Bank, she was strip-searched by Israeli officials, even though she was travelling on an American passport. "She had to go with the Palestinians and be naked. They took her shoes," he complains. "Why don't they get out," he yells at a reporter.

Then, there is a similar lament from a customer in the store. He criticises Israel for welcoming Jews from all over as citizens without extending the same hospitality to Arabs. "I was born there and I can't stay two weeks," he says.

Muhammad Silwadi agrees. A

Palestinian who wants to move back to his birthplace, he complains that "Jews from Ethiopia get more rights in my country than I do. My country is Palestine," he stresses, "not Israel." Recently, Silwadi returned for a month when his mother died, but he says he was refused permission to stay.

Because of such personal travails, the Arab-American community here does not have high hopes for Secretary of State George Shultz's efforts toward settling the unrest in Israel's occupied territories.

He has arrived in Italy ahead of his second Middle East trip to push the US peace plan.

This past weekend, in the first gathering of Palestinian-Americans since the current uprising began, 1,500 Arab-Americans met in national convention. The uprising, in which at least 85 Palestinians have died, was a prime topic of discussion, and on Sunday conveners demonstrated outside the White House.

But most of the estimated 150,000 to 200,000 Palestinians living in the United States in such cities as New York, Chicago, Detroit, and San Francisco are enduring the turmoil quietly.

Nabil Abraham, a second-generation Palestinian-American and author of "Arabs in the New World," says the Palestinian population is less vocal than the American Jewish population, for a number of reasons.

"Immigrants are notoriously scared," he says. They may not be comfortable with the language or they may feel unsure of their status. In some cases, the Palestinians here are not American citizens and do not want to compromise their chances for citizenship. Furthermore, he says, "Palestinians are primitive in their organization."

Finally, Arab-Americans often wish to avoid the insecurity and harassment they expect will come of drawing attention to their heritage. Palestinian leaders complain that as soon as they form an organization, it attracts the attention of the FBI.

A recent bus hijacking in which three Israeli civilians and the three Palestinian attackers were killed is a reminder to the Arabs of the tenuous nature of public opinion. Faris Bouhafa, an ADC spokesman, says the hijacking might serve to shift public opinion away at precisely the time when Palestinians were gaining sympathy.

"As much as I personally regret anybody getting killed," says Bouhafa, "you have to balance (the deaths of the three Israelis) with the Palestinians who have all been killed in the last few months." He notes that when Israeli soldiers kill Palestinians, "it's not called a terrorist act." Bouhafa is quick to defend Palestinian actions, expressing concern for their public image. Yet readers' letters in all major newspapers and advertisements placed by American Jewish groups indicate a swing toward the Palestinian side of the conflict.

Even so, the Arab-American shopkeepers along Atlantic Avenue in downtown Brooklyn are cautious. "Call me Jack," one suggests. "Say my name is Z," another says. They fear that publication of their names may endanger their families living in the occupied territories.

"Nobody in the Israeli government wants peace," complains the owner of a store crowded with Arabic videotapes, Middle Eastern groceries, and Palestinian flags. A Palestinian who has been in the US for 20 years, he says if peace comes, the Israeli government will no longer enjoy the substantial funding it now receives from the US.

But Sam Moustapha, a Syrian who works in his family's Brooklyn grocery store, is more optimistic about Shultz's shuttle diplomacy. "Any effort is welcome to stop the bloodshed," he says. "The uprising is the only answer right now."

Standing behind a cash register with the letters PLO scrawled across it, a store owner cites the Dec 3 closing of the Palestine Information Office in Washington as evidence of the US government's anti-Palestinian position.

"Israel has too much influence in this country," says a Jerusalem-born Brooklyn store owner. The conflict between Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, he says, is to create the impression that Israel is a democracy with open dispute among leaders. "They're very shrewd," he says.

While he dislikes the Israeli government, the shopkeeper also seems dissatisfied with Yasser Arafat's role as leader of the Palestine Liberation Organisation. "I wouldn't let him run my store," he says. But he acknowledges that Arafat has become a rallying symbol for the PLO.

He thinks Shultz is mistaken in looking to Egypt or Jordan as partners in negotiations. "It's not in their hands," he says.

Negotiate

Bouhafa, the ADC spokesman, agrees, saying the United States "continues to mirror Israeli policy" by looking for "surrogates" instead of dealing directly with the PLO. He says the conditions required before the US can serve as a legitimate middleman are "the recognition of the Palestinian right to self-determination, the acceptance of the establishment of a Palestinian state, and the willingness to negotiate with the PLO."

When the US decided it was time that we get out of Vietnam, we sat down and talked to the Viet Cong," says Isa Hassan, a Michigan pharmacist who has been in the US since 1962. He says the current Israeli situation is a parallel one in which Israel must negotiate with the PLO.

Hassan is active in an organization of Palestinians who trace their origin to the predominantly Christian town of Ramallah in the West Bank. The group, formed in 1952, began as a social organization, Hassan says. But since the 1967 occupation of the West Bank, there has been greater emphasis on educating the youth about their ethnic heritage.

Hassan speaks with pride of the time four years ago when he travelled to Tunis to meet Arafat. He maintains that the leaders of the movement are not involved in an Arab-vs-Jew conflict, but instead in a clash between Arabs and Zionists. "We are not asking for all of Israel," he says. "We are not trying to throw the Jews into the sea."

But it is rocky ground for such moderate views. One reminder is Abdullah bin Abdul Samad who says the end is coming for the Jews. A Muslim who divides the world into believers and non-believers, he says "the Muslims will fight the Jews." He believes both sides would continue to fight if a compromise were arranged, explaining, "There is no solution."

A disruptive force in British politics

Benn launches leadership bid

By Peter Gregson

LONDON, (Reuters): Tony Benn, the radical prophet of the Labour Party's left wing, bears a powerful reputation as a disruptive force in British politics.

But a bid to head the official parliamentary opposition, launched this month only days before his 63rd birthday, was extreme even in the annals of his chequered career.

With the backing of only a minority faction of the parliamentary Labour Party, he announced he was challenging Neil Kinnock for the leadership.

During a political career spanning nearly 40 years, his commitment to red-blooded socialism has never been in doubt. He once proudly declared: "I grow more left as I grow older."

In this battle, even his supporters give him little chance of winning. His opponents predict a crushing defeat by a margin likely to be as great as 4-1 when votes are counted at the annual party conference at Blackpool in October.

His challenge, with fellow veteran left-winger Eric Heffer running against deputy leader Roy Hattersley, sent shockwaves through a party trying to regroup after a crushing third general election defeat by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservatives.

Kinnock, 46, dismissed it as a pointless distraction. Key aides expressed stronger anger privately that six months of internal feuding would waste energy better spent building a platform to end the years in opposition.

The challenge has split even the "Campaign" group of 48 left wing members of parliament headed by Benn, and revived memories of a bitter and protracted 1981 battle when he ran against Denis Healey for deputy leader and lost only narrowly.

A Campaign member who asked not to be named said: "Anybody running against Neil at this stage is going to smash their heads on a brick wall they'd stand no chance."

Several others called the contest unnecessary and harmful. "It's a desperate fling by an old man in a hurry against a younger man who has time on his side," one commented.

Benn disagrees that his challenge is divisive. "I'm very keen that there should be a lot of goodwill and not conflict," he said.

Mud-slinging

He expressed no desire to be drawn into mud-slinging. "It will be low key. I have no desire to hot it up," he said, adding that he wanted to offer Labour Party members a different course to Kinnock's "soft left" revisionism.

Benn wants to stop Labour's drift away from its traditional commitment to trade unions and state ownership of industry, a course steered by Kinnock during his four years as leader in a bid to broaden the party's electoral appeal.

The main point of Benn's campaign is not necessarily to win. "I have always taken the view that democracy has a very important educational role," he said after announcing his challenge. "A discussion about a choice on central problems facing our people is itself an enormous gain."

The Benn-Heffer campaign, quickly dubbed the "nightmare ticket" by opponents, was launched only hours after Kinnock's national executive — to which neither belong — adopted a new policy document written by Kinnock and Hattersley.

The left denounced the document as vague and a watering down of Labour's most sacred principle, the commitment to "common ownership" of the means of "production, distribution and exchange" printed on the back of every party membership card.

Paper

A month earlier, the campaign group had published an "aims and objectives" paper, backing nuclear disarmament, British withdrawal from the Nato alliance, the abolition of the House of Lords and the return of major industries to state control.

Benn disavows personal ambition, using sweeping historical examples to state: "It's the ideas that I represent." "If you want to turn the QE2 round, you don't change the captain."

But he makes no secret of his dislike for what he regards as Kinnock's authoritarian and intolerant leadership and over the years has assiduously sought political power.

He renounced a peerage to return to the House of Commons in 1963 after being disbarred upon inheriting the title and went on to be a cabinet minister in the 1960s and 1970s.

Suspicious after months of war

North Ugandan civilians scared

By Jonathan Wright

PATIKO, Uganda, (Reuters): Wokorach Wokorach and his neighbours in the north Ugandan trading centre of Patiko are used to running.

With at least five separate armed groups on the loose over the past 18 months — gangs of common thieves, government troops, two rebel movements and bands of cattle rustlers from the east — this is hardly surprising.

"When they see people coming, the local people think it could be anything... we run up to 15 miles into the bush, even 30 miles," Wokorach told reporters whose civilian vehicle, the first to reach Patiko since August 1986, sent men, women and children scattering from their homes.

The cattle rustlers are usually described as Karamojong from the far northeast of Uganda, but no one has explained how they can operate 120 miles (200 kms) from home and many residents say some have really been NRA men in disguise.

Accessible

The district capital Gulu is only 15 miles (25 kms) south of the village, site of a fort built by Sir Samuel Baker's Egyptian government expeditionary force in 1872.

But, for Wokorach and the few remaining inhabitants, Gulu might as well be on the other side of the world.

"It's been almost two years since I went to town. The trouble is that if you go to town, the rebels think you have some link with the NRA (National Resistance Army) and they cut you up with machetes," he explained.

The tourist brochures from the 1960s and early 1970s, when tourists still visited the fort, optimistically claim it is accessible by an all-weather road from Gulu.

Since the troubles began, the bush has encroached on the roadway, in places leaving only a narrow path in the centre.

The courthouse is a pen for goats, the sub-county chief has abandoned his post and all the shops have been closed and empty since soon after the NRA arrived in pursuit of soldiers in the Uganda National Liberation Army, the government Army until the NRA captured Kampala in January 1986.

The Liberation Army soldiers, mostly from the local Acholi tribe, regrouped to form the rebel Uganda People's Democratic Army (UPDA) and in late 1986 a separate, religiously inspired, rebel group sprang up under priestess Alice Lakwena.

The woman and the NRA soldiers are under arrest and will be punished, the officers added.

Grievance

A serious local grievance is that the NRA, mostly strangers from the south and west of Uganda, took malicious informers at their word in the early days of the conflict.

"The informers would say, 'this man is a bad man.' The NRA would go, loot his house and kill his family... but everyone has been a criminal in one way or another," a local elder said.

The insecurity forced Italian missionaries to abandon 16 outposts, including several with hospitals or clinics, in February 1987. "In most cases the situation became intolerable, between thieves and violence," said Roman Catholic priest John Taneburgo.

He himself decided to move out of his seminary at Alokohm, only six miles (10 kms) west of Gulu, in February this year after a man fired at him through a half-open door.

"It was at heart level but I stepped aside just in time. I couldn't see who it was, he was wearing a greatcoat," he said.

Gulu has been in government hands throughout the fighting, except for a few hours in late 1986, but municipal services hardly exist. Not a single telephone is working and there is no electricity or piped water.

Looted

Unidentified gunmen burnt down the cotton gin, one of the town's major enterprises. The tobacco warehouse, looted of everything of value, has become a reception centre for rebels who take advantage of a government amnesty.

The light at the end of the tunnel is the tentative peace agreement reached last week between the NRA and the UPDA, under which the UPDA will stop fighting, come out of the bush and start detailed talks on joining the government Army.

"We consider it an important breakthrough. The UPDA is the main group and if they come in (from the bush), we will have gone a long way towards solving our problem," said Olanya, who acted as chairman in the peace negotiations.

Nicaragua-Contra agreement

A defeat for Reagan

By George Gedda

WASHINGTON, (AP): The ceasefire agreement signed this past week between Nicaragua and the Contra rebels may represent the most significant turning point for that country since the United States first began backing the insurgents in 1981.

Barring unexpected developments, the agreement could bring the war to an end and leave the ruling Sandinistas with a firm grip on power. The Sandinistas have ruled Nicaragua since their 1979 revolution.

President Ronald Reagan expended considerable political capital over the years trying to convince his countrymen that Sandinista power, left unchecked, would mean a Soviet beachhead in Central America and grave national security risks for the United States.

But Reagan was unable to muster consistent majority support for his policy. Too many legislators felt that the human costs of sustaining the war too high when compared with the benefits Reagan saw in trying to overthrow the Sandinistas.

The price paid by Nicaraguans over the past seven years has been obvious. The war has claimed more than 40,000 lives and left the economy in a shambles.

Support

The policy never had much enthusiastic support beyond the conservative wing of Reagan's Republican Party. In Latin America, it was difficult to find any president willing to express support for Contra aid, even in those Central American countries which Reagan said would be most affected by the collapse of the rebels.

For all the energy Reagan spent in support of the Contras, Congress approved only about $209 million for them over seven years — equivalent to what the White House says the Soviet Union provides to the Sandinistas.

every few months. During the height of the Vietnam war, the United States committed thousands of troops and spent that much every few days.

Now, it appears there is little the United States can do to influence events in Nicaragua. The administration has used extensive diplomatic and economic pressures to force the Sandinistas' hand with minimal results and now it has been deprived of what Reagan and the Contras believe is their most effective lever — military pressure. The best the Contras can hope for now is a humanitarian aid package that Congress consider next week.

Reconciliation

Given its past statements, the White House may try to take advantage of the new mood of reconciliation in Nicaragua and explore how to achieve a more normal relationship with the Sandinistas. There have been no serious talks between the two governments in more than three years.

There are several theoretical scenarios under which what was done last week could be undone, and the war resumed. Under White House prodding, Congress could decide to commit itself next week to an early vote on additional Contra military aid if the peace process breaks down and Reagan makes an aid request.

But it appears a majority in Congress, worn down by the Contra aid issue, does not want to give the President that authority.

Surrender

The most likely outcome is a Contra surrender to terms set forth by the Sandinistas during talks due to start April 6 on a permanent truce.

After a year in which the Contras had emerged as an effective fighting force, dispatching thousands of troops into Nicaragua from sanctuaries in Honduras, 1988 has marked a steady downward spiral.

Two views on popular music

Does rock music rot the brain?

By George Walden

"THE Gloomy Guru" as one American newspaper called Professor Allan Bloom, author of the controversial and best-selling The Closing of the American Mind certainly seemed to me a serious man when I spent the afternoon with him recently at Chicago University. But he is also immensely lively and humorous.

Nobody has dissected the intellectual and emotional lives of American students — and especially their music — with such uncompromising severity.

He sees the rock phenomenon as stunting the aesthetic and moral potential of the young, and reacts with passionate dismay: "As long as they have the Walkman on they cannot hear what the great tradition has to say, and when they take it off, they are deaf." Once, many of his students knew more classical music than he himself. Now it is a special taste — "like pre-Columbian archaeology."

These are not the rancid chattering of a middle-aged academic, or someone "out of touch" with the young. Bloom has spent most of his life amongst them. Nor is there any hint

In his controversial and best-selling book, The Closing of the American Mind, professor Allan Bloom sees the rock phenomenon as stunting the aesthetic and moral potential of the young, diminishing their imaginative powers and making it hard for them to develop mature tastes.

of the puritanical authoritarianism which leads the Soviet press to call rock "spiritual AIDS."

He simply believes that prolonged exposure to the music is not just the passing phase that many parents and academics like to think, but something that permanently diminishes the imaginative powers of the young and makes it hard for them to develop mature tastes.

In their films, plays or books they will go on craving, he believes, the three basic ingredients of rock: "Sex, hate and a smarmy, hypocritical version of brotherly love."

Young people, he says, know perfectly well that rock has the beat of sexual intercourse; this is why Ravel's "Bolero" is the one piece of classical music that is commonly liked by them.

He gives Mick Jagger — "a shrewd, middle-class boy who played the possessed lower-class demon and teenaged satyr till he was 40" — as an example of rock's influence on some of his students. Many who boasted of having no heroes had a secret passion to live his life.

Analogy

The analogy between rock and drugs, in his view, can be closer than many think. He has noticed that those of his students who have had a serious fling with narcotic and have cured themselves often find it hard to develop enthusiasms or great expectations of life: they have been spiritually neutered. To a lesser extent, the same can be true of rock.

Another illusion is the supposed camaraderie of the music. In fact, as well as promoting desire rather than love, it physically kills conversation by noise — makes impossible the shared speech that Aristotle saw as the basis of friendship. Parents literally cannot get through to their children either, and so lose control over their moral education at a time when no one else is taking it seriously.

In America, reactions to his views can be as violent as the music itself. But sometimes, the response is surprisingly positive. "How did you find out about us?" one student had asked him. "Because I spend so much time talking to you," Bloom replied. "But we don't usually say what we mean," the student at once said naively, and for Bloom, touchingly.

The evening after I saw him, a Chicago writer took me to one of the most popular blues establishments on the black side of the city, just south of the University itself. It was not the quietly melancholy variety, but the sort that makes your ribs judder. Bloom was certainly right on one point: there was no question of conversation, still less of discussing what the singer meant when he sang: "If you don't like the blues there's a hole in your soul."

Mick Jagger: a shrewd, middle-class boy who played the possessed lower class demon and teenaged satyr till he was 40.

A rock fan takes issue with the professor's views

'Lavish with generalisation, exaggeration and plain sloppy thinking'

By Tim De Lisle

THE chapter on music in The Closing of the American Mind is passionately argued, elegantly written, and thoroughly wrong-headed. Professor Bloom is lavish with generalisation, exaggeration, misapprehension and plain sloppy thinking; he is correspondingly economical with evidence, with supporting arguments, with the truth.

He starts as he means to go on, with a bold assertion: "Though students do not have books, they most emphatically do have music." The second half of this sentence is clearly right; the first half is equally clearly silly and wrong. And so it goes on. "Classical music is dead among the young," — even though, by Bloom's own admission, the campuses are alive with the sound of orchestras, discussion groups and appreciation societies, as well as the rhythms of rock and roll.

"Rock music has one appeal only, a barbaric appeal, to sexual desire — not love, not eros, but sexual desire undeveloped and untutored." One can think of a few songs Bloom may have in mind here (he mentions none himself); one can think of many more of which this is manifestly untrue. To take a couple of recent Grammy award-winners, is Paul Simon's "Graceland" all sex? Is U2's "Joshua Tree"?

The professor presses on regardless. "Never was there an art form directed so exclusively to children." Curious, then, that it should be young adults who now make up the biggest sector of its market. It gets worse. "These are the three great lyrical themes: sex, hate and a smarmy, hypocritical version of brotherly love." In fact the dominant theme of pop lyrics, as you would think even the most blinkered educationist must know, is romantic love. "Can't Buy Me Sex," "Slave to Sex," "I Just Called to Say I Want To Have Sex With You": they don't have quite the same ring.

Bob Geldof: neither smarmy nor a hypocrite

As for hate, well, there was a lot of it about in the punk heyday of 1976-77; precious little on 1980s best-sellers like Dire Straits' "Brothers in Arms" or Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the USA". And you can say what you like about Bob Geldof, but he is neither smarmy nor a hypocrite.

More generally, Bloom makes great play of the high volume at which rock is sometimes played, and of its alleged resemblance to drugs. The idea that conversation and Aristotelian friendship are being killed by loud music is a laughable; most really loud rock is heard at concert halls, which are no more where you go to talk than cinemas or theatres.

The other charge is more serious, and certainly rock appears to have become the opium of some of the people. But it is just as certainly nothing like so pervasive as television, which Bloom dismisses in half a sentence as playing "a comparatively small role in the formation of young people's character and taste." Where has he been?

Former world champion Eddie Kantar is not only one of the world's most prolific (and best) bridge writers, he is also one of the country's foremost teachers. He has now prepared 18 of his lesson series in the form of 16-page pamphlets. They cover both bidding and play, and include such subjects as Counting the Hand; Discarding; Placing the Opponents' Honors; Signalling at Suit Contracts; Common Errors in Bidding, Play and Defense; and more. The lessons are available at $2 each, plus 50 cents for postage and handling ($35 for all 18 lessons) from: Eddie Kantar, P.O. Box 427, Venice, Calif. 90291-0427.

This hand is from Slam Bidding at Suit Contracts. South's hand clearly qualifies for a jump shift. After North raises spades, South has visions of a grand slam, but North's disappointing revelation of only one ace brings the auction to an abrupt halt at the five-level.

Since he has trump control, West tries for a ruff by leading his singleton diamond. South wins and, if he is unaware of the danger, he might try to sneak a trump lead through by leading the queen. However, West should not fall for that play. He should fly up with the ace and return a high club, denying interest in that suit. If East is breathing, he wins the club and gives his partner a diamond ruff.

But South need not submit himself to that fate. After winning the diamond lead, he should cash dummy's high hearts, discarding the high diamonds from hand. Now the two black aces are the only tricks the defense can get.

Kantar's offering is like getting one of the world's great bridge names to teach you bridge at a never-to-be-repeated price.

New entries for the Guinness Book

Film folks break world records

By Firoze Rangoonwalla

"I MUST get into the Guinness," is the chant heard everywhere in filmland. For every other filmwala these days, the Guinness Book of World Records is the great goal and the zenith of achievement. Everyone is aiming to get his or her name included in the new edition, to be issued soon. And many of them say that they have at last succeeded in achieving the ultimate.

They may not have made much progress in their own profession. The industry may even regard some of them as freaks or hangers-on. But they will be there in the book, for the whole world to admire. After all, what is local success in the tinsel town of Bombay, compared to the international honour? Moreover, the Guinness entry itself will bring them notice and then the industry will give them their due share of work, wealth and fame.

Because of this, our film people have started working very hard. It was back-breaking business to break a world record, even if it sometimes got mixed with pleasure, as in the case of some lucky dogs, sorry lucky heroes. Moreover, the examples of Lata Mangeshkar, Dada Kondke, Prem Nazir inspired them, though even their achievements as recorded in the book have never been verified or documented. But that suited the film folks, who never believe in facts and proofs in any case. So their hopes of getting accepted are also fulfilled and they will soon take their place as champions of their trade and its tricks.

At the end of this month, news started trickling in from the film offices to this writer's office. Some came from rival camps too. But all conveyed the same message that so-and-so had made it to the book. As we have no way to check and counter-check, let the wish-horses be on paper, as they would love it to be. And they do not mind being recorded for any type of "achievement". So here goes:

—Amita Singh is being listed in the Guinness book as the fastest woman in the world so as to be accepted as a charming young movie heroine. On the other hand, Amala is the first actress in the world to have become a heroine without speaking a single word on screen.

Mithun Chakravarty's entry says that he is the first actor in the world to have erased Raj Kapoor's memory from the Soviet psyche and installed his own. And he has achieved this, not as a socialist or communist but as a "discoist". Our ever eccentric star Raj Kumar has also been listed for giving the maximum number of abuses to his co-stars and getting away with it.

Tough sanctions sought on Toshiba

US Congress drops retaliation amendment from trade bill

WASHINGTON, April 1, (AP): Congressional negotiators have scrapped Rep. Richard Gephardt's controversial trade retaliation amendment and have agreed to seeking tough sanctions on Japan's Toshiba Corp. in a new trade bill.

The bill also calls for repeal of the windfall profits tax and a $1-billion boost in US grain export subsidies.

Compromise

The compromise completed late last night would also require employers to give 60 days notice of plant closings and would increase government aid to those left jobless as a result of competition from imports.

But even as the bill moves ahead in Congress, concerns about a possible presidential veto are growing.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the House-Senate Conference Committee that produced the package, said there was bound to be some grumbling, but he was upbeat about the final product.

"We worked long and hard and I think evidence that it's a good product is that nobody's happy about it," said Rostenkowski, who worked out the package along with Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

At the heart of the measure are streamlined procedures for imposing import restrictions to aid US industries hard hit by imports and retaliate against barriers that trading partners put in the way of American exports.

Final arrangement began to fall into place yesterday morning when one of 17 separate groups of conferees adopted the trade sanctions against Toshiba and a subsidiary for selling computerised machinery to the Soviets for the silencing of submarine propellers.

The measure would ban US government purchases of Toshiba equipment for three years. It would bar import of products of the Toshiba Machine Corp subsidiary for three years. In the future, such violations would be punishable by import bans of two to five years.

Japanese government leaders today condemned the measure, charging the United States with overstepping its boundaries by adding its own penalties to those already taken by Japan.

The government hinted it might bring the matter before the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade if the measure becomes law.

"The United States is seeking to unilaterally impose its own penalties in disregard of the independence of other countries," Trade Minister Hajime Tamura said in a statement to reporters. "This is extremely regrettable."

Rostenkowski said he expected the legislation to pass because "we're going to need a trade policy in the next couple of years and I think this is as good as anything that's going to come across the president's desk."

The measure created a provision for driving down unwarranted foreign trade surpluses that had been sponsored by former democratic presidential hopeful Richard A. Gephardt.

Threatening

Veto threats from the White House hovered over the legislation, and some members of the House-Senate Conference Committee were dissatisfied with the bargain worked out between Bentsen and Rostenkowski.

Administration officials had been threatening a veto over provisions requiring employers to provide workers with notice of plant closings and the Toshiba sanctions.

Yesterday afternoon, however, White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater appeared to back off a bit, saying that the administration was not trying to signal a veto and still hoped to receive a trade bill that it could sign.

Rostenkowski told reporters before leaving on a congressional fact-finding trip to Turkey that he hoped to get sufficient members of the conference committee to sign the final product.

Farm lawmakers, meeting separately, said they were close to agreement on a provision that would put in place export subsidies of up to $500 million in 1990 unless negotiators reach agreement by then on phasing out agricultural subsidies under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The so-called triggered marketing loan would benefit producers of wheat, feed grains, soybeans and other oilseed crops.

Farm lawmakers also agreed on boosting by $1 billion the export enhancement programme, which furnishes grain companies and others with surplus government crops to induce them to ship American grain overseas.

Gephardt's plan would have required the US trade representative to roll back "excess and unwarranted" foreign trade surpluses by 10 per cent annually if negotiations failed to do the job.

In its place, Bentsen and Rostenkowski adopted a senate proposal that would require the trade representative to list foreign unfair trade practices and if necessary take action to force trading partners to end them.

Baker opposes Third World debt relief

WASHINGTON, April 1, (AP): Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III told Congress on Wednesday that he strongly disagrees with proposals to forgive some of the Third World's debt, now more than $1 trillion.

"I believe this path leads both debtors and creditors off the cliff," he said.

Distract

Forgiveness would distract both debtors and creditors from the need to make reforms, would encourage repudiation of debt, and shift the risk on bank loans to taxpayers, including US taxpayers, he added.

"I simply cannot endorse such schemes," he said.

He argued for a US contribution to increase the capital of the World Bank, the biggest single source of aid loans to Third World countries. He said pulling out of the World Bank or the Inter-American Development Bank, as some critics have suggested, would reduce US influence and make it more likely that they would act contrary to US interests.

But he said that President Ronald Reagan's administration would not ask Congress for money to bring the United States up to date in the year beginning Sept 30 on its arrears in payments to the World Bank. He said West Germany, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia had reduced their contributions because of the US shortfalls and he was sorry about that.

He promised that the Reagan administration, which will be out of office Jan 1, 1989, will ask that the money be furnished in the 12 months following Oct 1 of that year.

Congressman David R. Obey told Secretary of State George P. Shultz earlier this month that the arrears should be paid before a new contribution is sought. He predicted the administration's request would meet trouble in Congress. Obey heads a key subcommittee in the House of Representatives on questions of international aid.

Baker said the administration would not seek new contributions to the Inter-American Development Bank until the borrowing countries, which now control lending, give the US government greater power over new loans.

The United States is also asking changes in the bank's management.

Baker was testifying before the subcommittee on foreign operations of the Senate appropriations committee.

One member, Senator Don Nickles, complained of the bank's internal spending. He said it had recently moved into one of the most expensive new buildings in Washington at a cost of $225 million.

"We agree that's the kind of thing that has to be cleaned up," Baker said, but did not confirm Nickles' figures.

There was no immediate reply from the bank.

Baker clashed with Senator Daniel K. Inouye, chairman of the subcommittee, over plans to help other countries refinance as much as $16 billion owed to the United States for weapons and other military aid, to relieve them of some of the interest burden.

Japan's strong economy driving huge trade surplus lower

TOKYO, April 1, (Reuters): The robustness of Japan's economy has been helping trim the country's huge trade imbalance and the surplus may be cut by more than $10 billion in 1988, economists say.

"That level of reduction would be a healthy degree of adjustment," said David Pike, economist for the UBS Phillips and Drew international securities firm.

Japan's 1987 current-account surplus, its widest measure of trade, which includes both goods and services, was $87 billion.

Pike specifically sees the current-account surplus for this year at a conservative $75 billion.

Japan announced today that its current-account surplus for the month of February fell to $6.85 billion from $7.63 billion a year earlier.

"This drop was encouraging as it continues to show the trade surplus is decreasing," said economist Soichiro Akahane of Bank of Tokyo. It is a good sign.

The government also reported that trade in goods alone fell to a surplus of $7.44 billion in February from $8.28 billion a year ago.

The strong Japanese economy is spurring a sharp rise in imports, while dissuading some manufacturers from shipping goods abroad, Akahane said.

A boom for the construction industry has tightened the domestic market for steel and other building materials while active manufacturing has squeezed supplies for plastics and other petrochemical products, one economist said.

Exports of goods for February were up 17.9 per cent from the same month last year to $19.87 billion, while imports surged 45.1 per cent to $12.43 billion.

Although exports were strong, the growth was in value rather than volume, Akahane noted. The higher value comes from the rise of the yen against the dollar over the past year, he added.

The current-account surplus dropped nearly $200 million from January to $7.86 billion, while the trade of just goods fell $650 million to $8.45 billion.

Pike said the improvement in Japan's trade picture should help ease some criticism from the United States. Because Japan's surplus is falling, Washington's criticism could turn more to Asia's newly industrialised countries, he added.

Japan, though, could see more pressure emerging from Europe because its exports have been on the rise there, Pike said.

Although prices of Japanese goods in the United States have climbed due to the appreciation of the yen against the dollar, they have not risen much in Europe because the yen has not changed much against currencies there, he said.

S. Korea to launch oil exploration programme

SEOUL, April 1, (Opecna): South Korea will today begin an offshore oil exploration programme in a 5,000 sq. km. area in the East Sea under a government scheme, according to an announcement by the Ministry of Energy and Resources here. The programme will last till end of April.

The East Sea area was excluded from previous oil prospecting and development plans due to its depth of around 1,000 metres.

Before 1980, offshore oil development programmes could be launched only in areas with depths of 200 metres.

Iran boosts fuel imports as tanker war escalates

NICOSIA, April 1, (AP): Shipping analysts believe the Iraqis will intensify strikes aimed at throttling Iran's oil exports, a prediction that comes amid a Gulf war escalation and reports of increased Iranian imports of refined fuel.

"We can't see an end to the tanker war," Eric Ramheim of the Oslo-based International Association of Independent Tanker Owners, or Intertanko, said in a telephone interview.

"We had hoped the tanker war was coming to an end after a recent lull, but the situation is worse now than it's been for a long time," he said, referring to retaliatory strikes against Gulf shipping in the 7-1/2-year-old war. "You think it's reached a peak, and then it just gets worse."

Iran, one of the world's major oil producers, is importing record amounts of refined petroleum products, such as kerosene and jet fuel, the Middle East Economic Survey reported this week.

"This unprecedented sudden import of gas oil could be due either to damage inflicted on Iranian refineries because of the war," the respected oil industry newsletter said, or because Tehran may be "taking precautionary measures and stocking up these products in anticipation of a further escalation in the war."

The surge in Iran's refined imports coincided with an unprecedented Iraqi missile bombardment of Tehran and other key cities during the last month. Iran has responded with its own missile and artillery blasts in the so-called "war of the cities."

The weekly Economic Survey, published in Nicosia, said the Iranians have chartered a 200,000-ton tanker from West Germany's Marimpex Trading Company to deliver a full load of gas oil — the equivalent of more than 2 million barrels — from Rotterdam next month.

The Iranians already have taken delivery of nearly 3 million barrels of gas in recent weeks, industry sources said.

Makeshift

Iran has imported 300,000 barrels a day for the last 18 months after Iraqi raids reduced its domestic refining capacity by as much as one-third.

In contrast, Iran exported an estimated 550,000 barrels a day of refined petroleum products. There are 42 gallons to the barrel, and 3.8 litres to the gallon.

A large formation of Iraqi fighter-bombers attacked Iran's big Kharg Island oil terminal in the northern end of the Gulf on March 19, badly damaging two of the estimated 25 tankers that shuttle oil to makeshift terminal further south for transshipment to delivery tankers.

The 316,379-ton Avaj and the 249,829-ton Sanandaj were left in flames, and 50 crewmen were killed. Shipping sources said both vessels were so badly hit they probably will be scrapped.

The loading facilities on Kharg, heavily defended by anti-aircraft missile batteries, also were damaged, the Economic Survey said.

The main systems on the west of the island were knocked out in the bombing, forcing the Iranians to switch loading to a smaller jetty, slowing down exports that are Tehran's main source of revenue for its war effort, the Survey said.

Several other shuttle tankers, either owned by the state-run National Iranian Co. or chartered by it, are believed to have been put out of action in recent Iraqi air strikes.

Because Iraq's Gulf ports have been closed since the early days of the war, the Iranians have to take revenge by attacking neutral ships.

"The Iraqis are the key," Ramheim said. "Now they're attacking again, we think the situation's going to get worse because of Iran always retaliates."

Iranian gunboats attacked a Danish supertanker and a Norwegian-operated tanker on Monday, setting both ablaze after Iraq reported three air strikes on Iranian tankers.

Switzerland displaces W. Germany as No. 2

Japan most creditworthy nation again

NEW YORK, April 1, (AP): Switzerland has displaced West Germany as the world's second most creditworthy nation behind Japan, a new survey of international bankers reveals.

The United States — for many years the bankers' No. 1 choice — remains in fourth place. And in general the world's bankers seem to be taking a gloomier view of the world debt situation.

In a survey of 112 nations, the American financial magazine Institutional Investor finds that the average country's credit rating in March has dropped considerably from a similar survey last September.

Every six months the New York-based monthly asks about 100 international banks to rate the creditworthiness of more than 100 nations on a scale of 0 to 100. In the magazine's March survey Japan ranks first with a score of 94.6, and North Korea 112th with 4.0.

The global average rating was 38.9, down 0.4 points from last September, and down 1.1 points from March 1987. Institutional Investor notes that this is the fourth consecutive drop from the peak of 40.6 attained in March 1986.

Countries with higher credit ratings generally find it easier to borrow from international commercial banks and are likely to obtain more favourable credit terms.

Stable

"The most stable region in recent surveys has been Western Europe," the magazine says, "but this time it registered the biggest gain of any region, rising 0.6 points to 73.9."

Britain to import Algerian natural gas

ALGIERS, April 1, (Opecna): Algeria will supply Britain with 600 million cu. m. of natural gas over the next three years, it was reported here on Wednesday.

According to the Algerian Press Service, a contract was signed on Tuesday between the Algerian national oil company (Sonatrach) and British Gas.

Algeria has recently signed several agreements with other countries in a move to increase its market share and diversify markets for its natural gas, the news agency said.

US unemployment rate falls to 5.6pc in March

WASHINGTON, April 1, (Reuters): The US civilian unemployment rate fell to 5.6 per cent in March, the lowest level this decade, from 5.7 per cent in February, the government said today.

The Labour Department said another 262,000 non-farm jobs were created last month, most of them in service industries, after a surge of 517,000 in February.

The employment report was stronger than expected, and economists said it should banish any lingering speculation that the nation was heading for a recession.

Economists had forecast no change in the jobless rate and an increase of about 200,000 in non-farm payroll jobs.

They had also expected a much steeper downward revision in the number of jobs created in February. The government originally reported a rise of 531,000 jobs in February.

The employment report is scrutinised by government policymakers and Wall Street analysts because it provides the first statistical glimpse of how the economy performed last month.

Reliable

Moreover, unlike some other government data, the job figures are considered reliable.

February's hiring spree, for instance, was consistent with subsequent news of a jump in housing starts and moderate expansion in industrial output and retail sales.

Factory orders fell, but the overall picture was of an economy showing surprising resilience in the face of October's stock market crash.

Economists said the March unemployment report confirmed this conclusion and pointed to growth in the first quarter of at least two per cent.

The unemployment rate was last as low as 5.6 per cent in May 1979. In March 1987 it was 6.5 per cent.

About two-thirds of the growth in jobs last month was in the services sector, especially business and health services. Construction employment also increased, but the manufacturing workforce was virtually unchanged.

Jobs in wholesale trade rose but were little changed at the retail level. There were also modest gains in transport, government, insurance and real estate employment.

The report is yet more good news for Vice President George Bush, the Republican front-runner in the presidential election campaign, and a blow to Democratic challengers who contend the strong expansion is on a flimsy footing and needs new policies.

But economists said the vigour of the economy could pose problems.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has warned that wage costs could accelerate if the jobless rate falls close to five per cent, unleashing inflationary pressures that the central bank might have to restrain by raising interest rates.

The concentration of new jobs in services rather than in export-oriented manufacturing suggests the nation's huge trade gap will close only slowly, economists said.

Although more Americans found jobs last month, they worked shorter hours. The workweek averaged 34.6 hours, down from 34.8 in February, while the average factory workweek shortened to 40.9 hours from 41.0, the Labour Department said.

Part-time employment fell to 5.34 million in March from 5.57 million, while the number of people who could only find part-time work in non-farm industries rose to 2.48 million from 2.46 million.

The number of discouraged workers, those who want to work but have given up looking for a job because they believe they cannot find one, rose to 1.03 million in the first quarter of the year from 910,000 in the fourth quarter of 1987.

World Bank lends $400m to Argentina

WASHINGTON, April 1, (AP) — The World Bank approved a $400 million loan package yesterday to financially troubled Argentina and its banks.

Funds from the 15-year low interest loan will be released in two stages. The first half will become available immediately, with the release of the final $200 million contingent on the success of Argentina's economic recovery.

The World Bank said it made the loan to encourage deposits and confidence in the Argentine banking system, improve the distribution of credit and reduce its cost.

This action comes after a $317 million loan from the IMF two weeks ago.

Dollar and stock prices fall in Tokyo

TOKYO, April 1, (AP) — The US dollar and stock prices fell in Tokyo trading today as trading decreased with the approach of the Easter holidays in the United States and Europe.

The US currency opened at 124.30 yen and traded between a narrow range of 124.05-124.50 yen. It finished the week at 124.10 yen, down 0.40 yen from yesterday's close of 124.50 yen.

"There is not much happening," said Peter Tasker, head of research at Kleinwort Benson. "The dollar is weak and unpopular," he said, and a "poor supply and demand" contributed to the currency's fall.

The Bank of Japan intervened immediately after the foreign exchange opened for dealing to prop up the sagging currency, but Tasker said the amount of dollars the central bank bought was very small. The intervention was a ritual, he added. The bank does not publicly comment on its activities.

"It's the Easter holiday and people are not doing anything," added a dealer at a major American securities firm, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Anticipating

Traders said they are anticipating a weak dollar in the new 1988 fiscal year that began today. "The dollar will be wobbly," Tasker said, "but it probably will not fall below 120 yen."

On the Tokyo Stock Exchange, meanwhile, the Nikkei stock average of 225 selected issues fell for a second consecutive day and lost 156.04 points, or 0.59 per cent. It closed at 26,104.22 points.

The loss was in "reaction to an incredibly strong rise over the past week," Tasker said, referring to the 1,000-point gain the Nikkei averaged on Monday through Wednesday. Yesterday, the main market barometer lost 39.81 points.

Traders predicted the market would be quiet and show little direction during its half-day session tomorrow because of the Easter weekend.

Meanwhile, the dollar held fairly steady in extremely thin foreign exchange trading in Europe today ahead of the Easter weekend.

Most European and Asian centres were closed for Good Friday.

Trading did take place in Italy, France and Luxembourg, but dealers were idle most of the day, traders said.

"They are all lying low," said one trader in Milan. "There is absolutely no direction at all."

Gold markets in London, Zurich and Hong Kong were closed.

Other dollar rates in Europe late afternoon today, compared with late yesterday.

Conference in Bahrain ends

Link between NRIs and Indian officials necessary

By M.C. Bose from Bahrain

LEADING financial experts and seminar investment analysts (most of them are non-resident Indians) yesterday ended a Gulf NRI investment seminar at Bahrain's Diplomat Hotel.

The seminar was organised by the Bahrain-based NRI Investors Group in association with organisations operating in Kuwait and the UAE and opened on Thursday.

In his inaugural address, M.P. Muralidhara Menon, India's ambassador to Bahrain, said continuous and systematic communication links between NRIs and government of India officials was necessary in order to obliterate misunderstanding and lack of awareness of the various facilities that are available. Despite the fact that investment opportunities are available to NRIs in different parts of the world, positive contribution to the growth of the motherland should be considered as a primary duty of every Indian apart from taking into account his personal preferences and investments.

Menon told the Arab Times that the impressive strides made by India in the fields of industry, trade, science and technology and the liberal policy direction have opened up various opportunities for investment. In the context of Bahrain, the recent visits of Yousif Ahmed Al Shirawi and Habib Ahmed Qassim, the ministers of development and industry and commerce and agriculture, have given rise to possibilities of closer collaboration in a number of fields. According to available indications, many joint ventures are likely to be set up between the two countries.

The ambassador said NRIs could perceive these as opportunities for participation and added that similar possibilities existed for cooperation with other Gulf countries in view of their friendly relations with India.

Claimed

When asked about the importance of NRI investment, Menon said that while a bulk of the total estimated amount of Rs. 120,000 million was claimed by bank deposits (as NRE accounts), about Rs 10,000 million was accounted by shares in Indian companies, although a downward trend has been witnessed in recent years. Promotion of industrial service ventures in India could also be perceived as an area potent for substantial investment by the NRIs.

Menon added: "While several positive factors inherent among NRIs have been recognised financial resources, access to technology and an understanding of the international markets, existing problems can be resolved through various measures that have been introduced by the government, including liberalisation of policies, rationalisation of procedures and the creation of a window mechanism at the central and state government levels."

Sentiment

The seminar also witnessed a free and frank expression of experience and sentiments bringing into focus the existing irregularities and inadequacies. Participants were hopeful that the deliberations will pave the way for the emergence of an environment that will encourage greater participation with assured productivity and profitability of investments.

Meanwhile, a message from Eduardo Falerio, India's minister of state for banking and finance, gave new confidence among the NRIs in general and NRI investors in particular. "In recognising the importance of the various issues involved, the government is keen to foster the economic and cultural ties with Indian nationals settled abroad.

"A series of facilities including fiscal concessions have been extended to facilitate the investments of NRIs in their home country. Exercises are at hand to streamline the procedures, rules and regulations relating to available investment potential and ongoing projects with a view to further promoting such ventures. While the seminar organised in Bahrain offers a unique opportunity for NRI investors to discuss various issues, the views expressed will be considered in establishing a system that is more effective," he said in his message.

While the total investment of non-resident Indians NRIs in their home country was reported to be substantially high, participants at the seminar were critical of the absence of adequate measures that can ensure the safety of their involvement in some private firms on the one hand and the lack of uniformity in the laws, rules and regulations of the government on the other.

Piyush Mankad, controller of capital issue and joint secretary at the Ministry of Finance called for a proper understanding of the systems followed in India with regard to investments and the role played by his department in matters relating to public issues and investment policies. He added: "It is our view that the structural modifications should be effected to the stock exchange system in force in India. Its concept and composition should be reviewed and altered to not only help NRIs to plan their investment methodically with safety and security."

Manu Chhabria, a leading businessman and industrialist based in the UAE said a strong need existed for the establishment of a forum in India to promote the interest of the NRIs. Such a forum would help to remove this misconception and approach of NRIs regarding their country.

"The investment climate is ripe particularly in the industrial and core sectors," he added.

Nevin Meghiani, president of NRI investors group, Bahrain, welcoming the gathering, said a common platform was reached for the NRIs and India was gaining urgency in order to derive maximum mutual benefits.

C. S. S. Khanpuri, the chairman Kuwait NRI Forum, K. V. Mohan Menon, vice president, and Kavalsan the honorary secretary also spoke.

China unveils new joint ventures law

BEIJING, April 1, (AP) — The government yesterday unveiled long-awaited draft laws that promise state factory managers and foreign joint ventures substantial autonomy in making business decisions.

The two proposed laws and a draft constitutional amendment legitimising the private sector were submitted to the 2,970 delegates of the National People's Congress. China's legislature.

Vitality

The delegates are expected to discuss the measures in small group meetings over the next week and approve them on April 13, the last day of the Congress' 20-day session.

In presenting the proposed law on state-owned enterprises, Lu Dong, head of the State Economic Commission, said it was essential to China's modernisation.

"Whether or not, (state-owned) enterprises can have great vitality will have a great influence on the overall development of our national economy," he told delegates gathered in the huge Great Hall of the People.

"Therefore... we must separate government and industry," Lu said, "and guarantee the autonomy of enterprise management."

The government hopes autonomy will turn China's often debt-ridden, inefficient state stores and factories into lean, competitive production machines. Released from the shackles of state plans, they will be free to respond to changes in market demand — and also will be free to go bankrupt if they make bad decisions.

It is no coincidence that the government plans to implement a bankruptcy law later this year. More than 70 per cent of China's 90,000 state-run enterprises already have signed contracts with the government giving their managers some degree of administrative autonomy.

The new law is intended to erase lingering ambiguities over the roles of managers, local Communist Party officials, local government and unions.

Amendment

Similarly, the proposed law of Chinese-foreign joint ventures and the constitutional amendment allowing private enterprise serve to codify changes that have already been introduced in the economy, rather than break new ground.

Although the draft state enterprise law probably is the most widely discussed in Chinese history, having been submitted to special seminars nationwide, yesterday was the first time its actual wording was released to the general public.

"An enterprise shall, in accordance with law, make its own managerial decisions, take full responsibility for its own profits and losses," reads one of the 68 articles.

Enterprises also will be allowed to sell their products on their own after meeting state quotas, choose their own suppliers, set their prices and enter into contracts with foreign parties.

Senior leader Deng Xiaoping first suggested such a law in 1978, when he began his campaign to reduce central planning and revitalise the economy through monetary incentives. Versions have been discussed by four previous legislative sessions, generating debate unprecedented in China's largely rubber-stamp Congress.

Revisions

Official media reports indicate the Congress' standing law committee made revisions almost up to the last minute. One major criticism was that workers would be victimised by autocratic managers.

Thus, late additions include several clauses that promise wide powers to workers, substantially eroding business managers' promised new autonomy.

"An enterprise shall ensure that its staff and workers enjoy the status of masters... and shall practice democratic management," the bill says.

Indonesia receives higher tin output quota

JAKARTA, April 1, (Opecna) — Indonesia's tin sales on world markets received a significant boost following an increase in the country's production quota allotted by the Association of Tin Producing Countries, according to a spokesman of Tambang Timah, the state tin company.

Under the new quota Indonesia could produce 29,000 tonnes of tin a year, an increase of 4,484 tonnes over previous levels, he said, adding that about 90 per cent of the total output would be exported.

KD deposit rates jump dramatically

KUWAITI dinar deposit rates jumped dramatically on Thursday for overnight funds and firms in most other maturities amid tight liquidity.

Dealers said overnight dealt at 30 per cent and at 20 per cent and was offered as high as 40 per cent, compared to 6-1/2, 5-1/2 per cent levels on Wednesday.

Banks bid actively to finance dollar purchases dated on Thursday and by early afternoon dealers were still quoting 25/10 per cent.

Other short dates were marginally above Wednesday levels at 6-1/2, 5-1/2 per cent for the spot-next and tomorrow-next, and seven, six per cent for the one-week.

The fixed periods were quiet but climbed with the short dates especially in the one-month, which it 5-7/8, 3/8 per cent from 5-1/4, 4-3/4 per cent on Wednesday.

Three and six-month funds were quoted at 5-3/4, 1/4 per cent each and the one-year at 5-5/8, 1/8 per cent.

The Central Bank twice adjusted its dinar exchange rate to account for the dollar's fall on international markets, first to 0.27303/13 to the dollar and then to 0.27278/88 from Wednesday's 0.27381/91. Commercial banks quoted rates of around 0.27290/300.

Meanwhile, in Bahrain, the Saudi riyal deposit market edged higher on Thursday as banks in the kingdom and Bahrain's offshore market sought funds ahead of a possible Saudi government bond issue to finance the 1988 budget deficit.

Dealers said the market was calmer than on Wednesday when trading was at times hectic after kingdom bankers, cited in a Reuters report, said the bond issue would be postponed.

An official Saudi source later denied the report, prompting some fresh borrowing interest as banks began trading on Thursday. Saudi banks were reluctant to put deposits on offer, while Bahrain banks were generally looking for funds.

The issue of how and when Saudi Arabia will offer bonds has dominated the interbank market since the scheme was unveiled in late December. Wednesday's official statement from Riyadh made no mention about timing of a possible issue.

Dealers said the market remained confused, but few if any banks in Saudi Arabia were prepared to go short of the riyal while an issue remained in the offing.

Australia name squad for Pakistan tour

SYDNEY, April 1, (Reuters): Australian cricket selectors yesterday announced a squad of 15 to tour Pakistan in September for a series of Tests and one-day matches.

The squad chosen, while structured around a core of established Test players, raises a few eyebrows within cricketing circles with the selection of several young and relatively unknown players.

In a major surprise, New South Wales captain Greg Dyer has been dropped by the selectors and replaced by unknown Queenslanders Ian Healy.

Equally surprising was the recall of forgotten Test opening batsman and Western Australia's captain Graeme Wood and the selection of Victorian youngster Jamie Siddons, who is yet to make his Test debut.

As expected, left West Australian fast bowler Bruce Reid returns after missing the latter part of 1987/88 season through a back injury.

The selectors have also announced three standby players in the form of pace bowlers Merv Hughes, Chris Matthews, and dynamic New South Wales all-rounder Mark Waugh.

The Australian Cricket Board (ACB) said players would be subject to stringent fitness tests at a training camp in August when the final composition of the touring squad will be decided.

The Australian squad is: Allan Border (captain), Geoff Marsh, David Boon, Tony Dodemaide, Ian Healy, Dean Jones, Craig McDermott, Tim May, Bruce Reid, Jamie Siddons, Peter Sleep, Peter Taylor, Michael Veletta, Stephen Waugh, and Graeme Wood.

Nystrom and Arias upset

HOUSTON, April 1, (UPI): Top-seeded Kent Carlsson of Sweden defeated defending champion Jimmy Arias 6-3, 6-3 last night in a second-round match at the River Oaks International tournament.

Seeded players who lost yesterday included No. 3 Joakim Nystrom of Sweden, a 7-6 (7-2), 7-5, loser to Mark Dickson, and No. 4 David Pate, who lost 6-3, 6-0, to Sammy Giammalva of Houston.

Advancing were eighth-seeded Guillermo Perez-Roldan of Argentina, who beat his compatriot Guillermo Villas 6-3, 6-3, and sixth-seeded Andre Leconte of France, who defeated Christian Bergstrom of Sweden, 1-6, 7-6 (7-5), 7-5.

Two earlier matches were decided by third-set tiebreakers. Jonas Svensson of Sweden beat American Jim Courier 5-7, 6-0, 7-6 (4-0), and Peter Lundgren of Sweden beat Christ van Rensburg 6-4, 0-6, 7-6 (7-4).

SHASTRI AND HIRWANI SHINE AGAINST NEW ZEALAND

Indians rout Kiwis for Sharjah Cup

SHARJAH, United Arab Emirates, April 1, (Reuters): India, who scored 107 runs off their last 10 overs, beat New Zealand by 52 runs to win the Sharjah Cup cricket tournament today and a prize of $30,000.

All-rounder Kapil Dev hammered 49 not out off 26 balls in the late scoring spree that carried India to a formidable 250 for seven from their 50 overs. New Zealand never looked like overhauling them and were all out for 198 in 45.3 overs.

The New Zealanders collected $20,000 and Sri Lanka, the third team in the competition $20,000 and Sri Lanka, the third team in the competition $15,000.

Leg-spinner Narendra Hirwani, who marked his Test debut earlier this year with 16 wickets against the West Indies, was named Man of the Series after he destroyed the New Zealand middle-order to finish with four for 46 off 10 overs.

His 10 wickets in three matches made him the most successful bowler in the tournament.

Captain Ravi Shastri, who struck three sixes and three fours in making 72 off 68 balls, helped Kapil Dev in taking India's overall run rate to five an over. The pair added 73 for the sixth wicket and for his contribution.

Shastri was made Man of the Match.

Kapil Dev rounded off the Indian innings by swinging the last two balls from Ewen Chatfield for leg-side sixes. Richard Hadlee also suffered as the later Indian batsmen stepped up the tempo, his last five overs going for 41 runs.

New Zealand had bowled and fielded magnificently to restrict India to 143 for four off the first 40 overs. Only veteran Mohinder Amarnath batted freely at the start of the Indian innings, scoring a compact 58.

While John Wright was going well, New Zealand might have pulled off an unlikely victory. The New Zealand captain batted beautifully for his 55, which included five fours, and his run out was a wasteful end to his fine effort.

Of the later batsmen, Mark Greatbatch and Ian Smith scored 47 and 40 but never threatened to deny India their victory.

"We have no excuses," Wright said. "My run out and our bowling in the last ten overs cost us the match."

Wright described Hirwani as an "interesting bowler" and said: "We did not play as intelligently as we should have done against him.

Shastri said: "It always feels good to win. We were in control after scoring 250 which is a very formidable total."

Shastri conceded that before the last ten overs "New Zealand had us on the rack. If we had been restricted to around 200, then the story might have been different."

Becker thrashes Gilbert to reach final

DALLAS, April 1, (Reuters): Second-seeded Boris Becker of West Germany removed one of the few jinxes of his career by beating American Brad Gilbert 6-4, 6-2, 6-1 yesterday to advance to the final of the $500,000 World Championship Tennis Finals.

Becker, defeated by Gilbert in three previous encounters, will face the winner of the semifinal between top-seeded Stefan Edberg of Sweden and Yannick Noah of France.

Problems
Gilbert, suffering from a sore left ankle, broke Becker in the third game of the match for 2-1 but had problems with Becker's powerful serve, which tallied 12 aces in the match.

Becker promptly broke back for 2-2 and broke again with a backhand pass for 4-2.

Becker, ranked fourth in the world, stumbled at the end of the first set when he went up 5-2. The 20-year-old West German saved a break point in the seventh game and then squandered four match points on Gilbert's serve in the eighth game.

Gilbert, 10th in the world, prolonged the set by breaking Becker in the ninth game for 4-5. The American fought off a fifth set point with a running forehand winner before Becker finally closed out the set when Gilbert sailed a routine backhand long.

Becker has not lost to anyone four consecutive times except for Ivan Lendl.

"What can I say? I played a perfect match. He has always caught me at the worst moments of my career, times when I had mental problems. Tonight, I started better than I finished," Becker said.

Becker picked up his first serve in the second set, hitting at least one ace in each of his four service games. He broke Gilbert on a double fault in the second game and again in the eighth game with a backhand winner to close out the second set.

Becker was even more impressive in the third set, holding off five break points with his serve in the third game before closing it out with an ace to take control of the third set.

Edberg cruised past last-minute substitute Martin Jaite Wednesday night, 6-4, 6-3, 6-0.

Noah won Wednesday's other quarter final match, using an overpowering serve to surprise Tim Mayotte, 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

Tarabini stuns Manuela Maleeva

LARGO, Fla., April 1, (Reuters): Upset Patricia Tarabini of Argentina, playing the best of her career, upset Bulgarian second seed Manuela Maleeva 7-6 (9-7), 2-6, 7-6 (7-3) yesterday to reach the semifinal of the Florida Women's Tennis Open.

In an earlier second-round match, sixth-seeded Sylvia Hanika of West Germany struggled to beat South African Rosalyn Fairbank 3-6, 6-4, 6-3. Fifth-seeded Katerina Maleeva of Bulgaria also advanced yesterday, taking 2-1/2 hours and three sets to eliminate Petra Huber of Austria 6-7 (3-7), 6-3, 6-1 in second-round play.

Tarabini, 19, played to the crowd of some 3,000 fans who loudly backed the Argentine.

Brought
"I'm so disappointed," Manuela Maleeva said. "I was doing everything right but at night I lose a lot of confidence. I missed a lot of overhead shots. I tried to do too much with the ball."

The match was filled with disputed calls, all of which brought the crowd - solidly behind Tarabini, who had beaten seventh-seeded Isabel Cueto of West Germany to reach the quarterfinal round yesterday.

"I'm very happy with the people, I'm happy on the court and I like to play," Tarabini said.

"Maleeva is a good person on and off the court, helping to explain some of the linesman's calls to me, but I think she was more nervous than I was because I just love to play tennis."

Dinah Shore golf

RANCHO MIRAGE, California, April 1, (Reuters): American Muffin Spencer-Devlin overcame strong gusty winds yesterday to shoot a four-under-par 68 and take a one-stroke lead after the first round of the $500,000 Dinah Shore golf tournament.

Austrian Jan Stephenson was stroke off the pace, followed by Marta Figueras-Dotti of Spain, two shots behind the leader.

Five players were level at 71 on a day when wind gusts reached 45 miles per hour over the 6,308-yard course at the Mission Hills Country Club.

Richards struggles to be fit for first Test

GEORGETOWN, Guyana, April 1, (Reuters): West Indies captain Viv Richards is struggling to be fit for the first Test against Pakistan starting in Georgetown tomorrow.

Richards missed four of the five one-day internationals against the touring team after a haemorrhoids operation last month and his chances of playing were put at 60-40 by manager Jackie Hendriks.

Richards confessed that he was in some discomfort while running and that any decision over whether he would play would be left to the last minute.

Despite their ascendancy in the one-day series, the absence of Richards would be a big blow for West Indies. The balance of the side would be upset with the Antiguan's tight bowling likely to be missed.

Burden
If Phil Simmons replaced Richards, Carl Hooper would have to shoulder the burden of bowling spin. He has taken only two Test wickets with his off-spin.

Should Richards be unfit, Gordon Greenidge, who led his side to a 5-0 triumph in the one-day series, will lead his country for the first time in a Test.

Curtley Ambrose, West Indies' most recent "find" in the pace department, has recovered from a swollen ankle and will make his Test debut. "Young Bird" as he is nicknamed, took nine for 103 off 28.3 overs in the first three one-day internationals before being injured.

Malcolm Marshall, having recovered from a knee injury, will take the new ball, with Patrick Patterson and Courtney Walsh making up the pace quartet.

Pakistan are at last able to select from a full squad, although Tauseef Ahmed's shoulder injury has already forced him to return home. Ijaz Faqih, his replacement, arrived in Guyana only last Sunday but will play in the Test.

Faqih, an off-spinner who bowled an economical seven-over spell in the final one-day international, is also a useful batsman having scored a century against India at Ahmedabad last year.

The first five Pakistani batsmen select themselves, all having scored runs on the tour. The problem spot appears to be number six, to be filled either by Ijaz Ahmed or Aamer Malik who are both short of runs.

Given wicketkeeper Salim Yousuf's bruised hand, Aamer may be preferred as a back-up.

With a number of deliveries keeping low or shooting through on the re-sown Georgetown wicket, the toes could be vital. A fourth innings target of over 250 would not be an easy one to chase.

Probable teams:
West Indies: G. Greenidge, D. Haynes, R. Richardson, V. Richards or Phil Simmons, A. Logie, C. Hooper, J. Dujon, M. Marshall, C. Walsh, C. Ambrose, P. Patterson.

Pakistan: Rameez Raja, Mudassar Nazar, Shoaib Mohammad, Javed Miandad, Salim Malik, Aamer Malik, Imran Khan, Salim Yousuf, Ijaz Faqih, Wasim Akram, Abdul Qadir.

The three-match cricket Test series promises to be as evenly contested and hard fought as the last one staged in the Caribbean in 1977.

The West Indies emerged then as 2-1 victors, but only after winning the final Test in Kingston and narrowly escaping defeat in Bridgetown, where Pakistan failed to take the last West Indian wicket in their second innings.

The 1977 series was memorable for scintillating batting and hostile fast bowling from both sides. Gordon Greenidge, Wasim Raja and Majid Khan all scored over 500 runs while Colin Croft, Joel Garner and Imran Khan each took 25 wickets or more.

Remarkably Croft, 24 at the time, had played only one first-class match prior to the 1977 season and yet he claimed 33 wickets in the series at an average

Richards: believes he still has talent of just over 20.

This year, Ambrose threatens to repeat history. Ambrose was unable to command a regular place in the Leeward Islands team until this season, when he broke the record for wickets taken in first class domestic cricket with 35 in only five matches.

The batting on both sides looks exceptionally strong with the West Indies probably having the edge. But the Pakistanis are strong right down the order with Wasim Akram at number 10.

The West Indians will need no reminding of their capitulation to Abdul Qadir, who took six for 16 in Faisalabad in November, 1986, that was responsible for their lowest ever total in Test cricket - 56.

The West Indies lost that Test but did fight back to draw the series 1-1. In the recent match in Georgetown, Qadir mesmerised the young West Indian Board XI batsmen in his only spell of the match, taking three wickets in his first four overs and extracting turn and bounce on a wicket adjacent to the one to be used for the Test.

The West Indians' vulnerability, however, to leg spin was highlighted in their emphatic defeat by India in Madras in January when 19-year-old Narendra Hirwani took 16 wickets on his debut, admittedly on a poor wicket that was grossly underprepared.

Yet in the same match Clyde Butts, the Guyanese off-spinner, failed to take a single wicket in 45 overs spread over two innings.

Greenidge, who missed the Madras defeat through injury, was in imperious form during the one-day series while Richards should be refreshed from his recent enforced break from the game.

Just turned 36, he says he still has the same enthusiasm for the game as when he started his illustrious career. "I'm still feeling pretty good... I've always enjoyed my cricket and I still enjoy it, even though the role is a little bit rough sometimes."

"When I cannot give of my all, the time will be to call it a day. By the time I've left I want our young guys, each and every one, to be confident enough to take West Indies cricket on further."

"I don't think I've done what I'm supposed to do yet. So long as I keep myself fit, I feel I can prove those people wrong who say you start deteriorating after 30. I've got this knack for trying to prove people wrong."

"I still believe there is something for me to accomplish that I didn't do when I was 25 or 26. I don't know what team that might be against. I don't feel I've contributed the way I should have and maybe in the latter part of my career it will happen."

"When I had that year when I scored the most runs in a calendar year I didn't really know that much as such. It was just pure natural talent. I still believe that talent is there, but the head is a little bit wiser."

The Pakistanis for their part, despite their drubbing in the one-day series, are quietly confident about the Test series. Captain Imran Khan says he is now almost at peak fitness after feeling sluggish at the start of the tour.

Optimistic
The tourists' front-line batsmen, particularly Javed Miandad and Rameez Raja, are running into form at precisely the right moment. Moreover they will not have to play on a fast wicket until the third Test in Bridgetown, the wickets at Georgetown and Port of Spain both being slow by Caribbean standards.

Tour manager Intikhab Alam is optimistic. "I think that once the ball is 15-20 overs old we have the better bowling attack. We shall go into the first Test with two specialist spinners, Abdul Qadir and Ijaz Faqih, both able to turn the ball sharply," he said.

"I think if we can bat first and make 350-400 in the first innings, we will have a very good chance of winning."

Australians line up to attack Botham

SYDNEY, April 1, (Reuters): Politicians, leader-writers and former cricketers polished up their haloes before joining the long queue of Australians waiting to stick the knife into England all-rounder Ian Botham yesterday.

Prime Minister Bob Hawke, former captain Ian Chappell and legendary leg-spinner Bill O'Reilly agreed they were glad to be rid of the tempestuous Botham who was sacked by Queensland on Tuesday after just one year of a three-year contract.

The country which introduced aluminium bat-throwing and betting on the opposing team in mid-Test match to the cricketing arena has behaved like a maiden aunt in the face of Botham's behaviour.

Criticism
Hawke, former tough union boss and famed drinker, was tut-tutting with the rest of them on Wednesday.

"He (Botham) let cricket down, he let Queensland down, he let Australia down. I think the Queensland Cricket Association (QCA) made the right decision," Hawke told reporters.

The agnostic premier is a keen sports follower who recently attracted criticism for shouting "Jesus" when he hit a bad drive in a televised Pro-AM golf tournament.

Hawke is eloquent about his love of golf. "Of all the crap that has been written in the last few months, the crappiest has been that Hawke shouldn't be playing golf," Hawke said recently.

Chappell maintained Botham had "not done a hell of a lot" to earn his money with Queensland. Chappell did not mention he was himself no saint on the cricket field.

He once took an Australian newspaper group to court in a defamation suit which he lost.

Evidence given at the case included an incident when Chappell punched a West Indian cricket official for which he was convicted in a court in the Caribbean.

Chappell also dropped his trousers to show his backside to the crowd more than once in his career, during which he was twice suspended for three weeks for swearing at umpires.

Ian's brother Greg was the main instigator behind the QCA's decision to sack Botham and fine him $3,700 after accus-tions Botham had assaulted a passenger on a domestic flight and damaged a dressing room.

Greg, despite superb batting which netted him 7,110 Test runs, guaranteed himself a place in cricket history when he ordered his brother Trevor to bowl underarm the last ball of a one-day international against New Zealand in 1981.

The ruse, devised to prevent New Zealand scoring the six needed to win, was widely condemned and led to a marked cooling of sporting relations between the two countries.

The fiery O'Reilly, no stranger to controversy having played in the pre-war bodyline series against England, was in print yesterday with an article headlined "Good riddance to the prince of chequebook cricket".

A man who finds little to savour in modern cricket, O'Reilly said he hoped that the Botham experience would sound the death knell of the free trade in players between England and the rest of the cricket world.

Another former Test player, Norman O'Neill, was also sputtering with anger yesterday. "Botham's behaviour is just not on - the incidents are disgusting."

"I'm a fan of Botham's cricket but not his behaviour. And I think he's finally got the penalties he deserves after years of getting away with murder."

Most heavyweight dailies dealt with Botham in their leader columns. The Australian began its offering with "Boorishness has no place in sport".

Behaviour
Only the Brisbane Sun, a Queensland newspaper, took a step back to point out that the behaviour of Australian cricketers has not always been above reproach.

Incidents highlighted include Dennis Lillee throwing away an aluminium bat at Perth after he was refused permission to use it in a 1979 Test, and Lillee and Rod Marsh betting against Australia in a 1981 Test against England.

"When you look at the fine example set by Australian cricketers, you cannot allow a situation where a pommie lout is allowed to get away with behaviour which could bring the game into disrepute," the Brisbane Sun said.

"It just wouldn't be cricket."

ARGENTINA AND W. GERMANY ELIMINATED

Soviets and Swedes stage upsets

WEST BERLIN, April 1. (Reuters) The Soviet Union and Sweden staged shock upsets against world champions Argentina and hosts West Germany in the West Berlin four-nation soccer tournament yesterday.

The Soviet team turned on a brilliant display of skill and power to humble Diego Maradona's Argentina 4-2.

Sweden came back from a goal down at halftime to draw 1-1 with an inspired West German side and won through 4-2 in a penalty shoot-out.

Ignominy
The Soviet Union now face Sweden in tomorrow's final with the two teams who met in the 1986 World Cup final in Mexico less than two years ago facing the ignominy of playing in the warm-up game for third place.

But there was no element of luck in either victory. The Soviet Union, fielding nine Dynamo Kiev players, were simply devastating.

They grabbed two goals in the first 15 minutes through Alexander Zavarov and Gennadi Litovchenko and striker Oleg Protasov added two more in the second half, one a penalty. Argentina, who included seven of their World Cup winning team, replied through their best player, young midfielder Pedro Troglio, and Maradona, who scored from a direct free-kick in the second half.

It was an exhilarating match, in sharp contrast to the tedium of the opening period of the second game.

The West Germans, who have not won any of their last five matches, led through a Klaus Allofs goal just before the break.

But Peter Truedsson deservedly equalised 16 minutes from time and Sweden, playing neat soccer in the second half, would have wrapped it up in normal time if they had not squandered several chances.

In the end missed penalties by Lothar Matthaeus and Rudi Voeller put Sweden in the final. Home trainer Franz Beckenbauer, plainly disturbed at his team's form 10 weeks before West Germany stages the European Championship, was asked which of his players he was satisfied with.

"None of them," he replied poignantly.

Perhaps an even bigger surprise than the results was the lack of spectators at a soccer feast which delivered as much as it promised. Only 10,000 were at the opening game and just 20,000 to see the second, one of the lowest figures ever for a West German international.

West Germany came to the tournament as favourites for the June championship with most expert opinion rating the Soviet side as over the hill.

But the two matches had fans and foreign trainers gazing in wonder at the almost outrageous brilliance of the Dynamo Kiev ensemble and shaking their heads in disbelief at the crass incompetence of the home team.

Three more hours of soccer tomorrow may only serve to confirm that comparing the two teams is like equating a Formula One racing car with a go-kart.

The well-oiled Soviet machine purred along under perfect control thanks to midfielders Zavarov, Vasily Rats and Litovchenko who show skills and subtlety of a kind never before seen in a Russian team.

Alexanko helps Barcelona outlast Real Sociedad

MADRID, April 1. (Reuters) Barcelona, with a 61st-minute goal by their captain Jose Alexanko, beat Real Sociedad 1-0 in the Spanish Cup final on Wednesday night to clinch a place in European cup competition next season.

It was a success the Catalan club badly needed coming towards the end of a season during which their League form has rarely been better than mediocre. They are lying 11th in the First Division.

After a lacklustre first half, Alexanko seized the opportunity to put his side ahead 16 minutes after the interval.

International midfielder Ramon Caldera, brought on in place of Victor Munoz, floated in a cross when England striker Gary Lineker fired against goalkeeper Luis Arconada. The rebound fell to Alexanko who scored from close range.

Alexanko nearly scored a second five minutes later but the veteran Arconada dived full stretch to deflect the ball for a corner.

Real Sociedad striker Jose Bakero came close to scoring an equaliser in the last minute. Barcelona goalkeeper Andoni Zubizarreta blocking his shot.

Khadim and Bakheet win Dubai Powerboat Race

DUBAI, In the "worst weather that we could have had," Dubai's Khadim Saif and co-driver Bakheet Salem ploughed through treacherous seas to finish first overall in the Emirates-sponsored Third Dubai Offshore Powerboat Race at Mina Seyha yesterday.

The heroic pair, who fought their way through waves ten feet high in places in their 31-foot Gulfcraft powered by twin 225 hp Evenrude engines, claimed the Dh120,000 prize and a Range Rover with two first class return tickets to London on Emirates.

And they shamed the much more powerful Group A boats, many of them built to outdistance their poorer relations by miles. In fact, the first Group A boat to finish was in ninth place overall and that was the Australian-built catamaran of last year's winner Jaffer Ridha Ali and Australian Ian Traveskis.

But to be fair to Jaffer and Ian, who can fly off to London first class on Emirates with Dh200,000. They can leave their other prize, a Mercedes 300 SEL, at the airport car park.

Jaffer Ali said: "It was a very tough race in very heavy seas. My partner who was 1980 world champion and the builder of no fewer than nine of yesterday's twin-bull entrants, added: "We got lost for a while at the buoy off Jebel Ali, but we were still a good ten miles in the lead on the run along the shore to the finish."

That's when disaster struck. "We hit a plank of wood which broke up one of the engines and after that we just had to limp home. We were lucky to hold on to first place in Group A."

It was a race that had been expected to finish in just under an hour if conditions had been perfect. The first boat took two hours and 20 minutes, a time difference that shows just how spirited were the seas.

A crowd of more than six thousand turned up to watch the boats enter the water, the dancing and playing of the local bands and an ear-shattering performance by the UK pop group Blue Merceles.

Of the race, they saw little, for it took the boats along the Jumeirah shore to Duby Drydock, then straight out to sea for ten miles. At that point, those who hadn't sunk, been swamped or simply broke down, carried on along a Z-shaped course that eventually brought the survivors back to the finish line at Mina Seyha.

In second place overall were Mohammed and Ahmed Khalifa, winning Dh 100,000 and two first class return tickets to Frankfurt. And the third boat home, the 24 ft Al Shaali, was driven by Khalid Mohammed Salem and Abdullah Buhaleeba.

W. Germany retain Champions' Trophy

LAHORE, Pakistan, April 1. (Reuters) West Germany won the Champions' Trophy hockey tournament for the third successive time today, thanks to the number of goals they scored in the week-long event.

West Germany snatched the trophy from Pakistan, who had led the standings going into the final day but managed only a 1-1 draw against world champions Australia in their closing game.

The West Germans, who beat Britain 3-1 today, finished level with Olympic champions Pakistan on points and goal difference.

but earned the trophy because they had scored two more goals than the home side — a total of 11.

Pakistan's young team had to be content with the silver medal while Australia, two points behind, finished third, just ahead of the Soviet Union.

Equalised
West Germany's hero was late substitute Michael Hilgers, who came on when captain Heiner Dopp was injured with the teams at 1-1.

Hilgers scored twice within 10 minutes, first deflecting a shot from Stefan Blocher and then collecting a long pass from Carsten Fischer.

Britain had outplayed the West Germans for three-quarters of the match but scored only in the 51st minute when captain Richard Dodds put them ahead from a penalty corner.

The goal goaded West Germany into greater action and within one minute Fischer and equalised, again from a penalty corner.

Pakistan pleased a 20,000 crowd when they took the lead against Australia in the 22nd minute, with a goal against the run of play by Mohammad Irfan.

Australian centre half Warren Birmingham equalised from his team's fifth penalty corner but Pakistan continued to threaten with quick breaks and had two late penalty corners which Mohib sent wide.

Prost and Senna set the pace

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, April 1. (UPI) The two McLaren turbo-charged cars of former world champion Alain Prost of France and his Brazilian teammate Ayrton Senna set the pace today in the first training sessions for the opening race in the 1988 Formula One Grand Prix championship.

Prost's Honda-powered car clocked one minute 31.23 seconds round the 3.216-mile Jacarepagua track, venue of Sunday's Brazilian Grand Prix, while Senna was half a second behind.

Prost, the 1985 and 1986 titleholder, spun off the track in front of the pits in the final seconds of morning training, but climbed from his car unhurt and sat scratching his head in apparent puzzlement.

McLaren team manager Creighton Brown said Prost apparently dropped a wheel over the kerb and lost control: "Even world champs make mistakes sometimes," he said.

Senna predicted the pole-winning time for the race would drop to around 1.28 in official training runs later today and again tomorrow.

Fastest
"The car is running very nicely, it's well balanced," he said.

Britain's Nigel Mansell placed third in his Honda-Judd powered Williams, making him the fastest driver using a conventional, non-turbo-charged motor which is less powerful.

"They just lose us on the straights," he said. Mansell, who placed second behind Brazilian Nelson Piquet in last year's championship, said he "had to be happy" with third place.

Two Kuwaiti soccer players return home

KUALA LUMPUR, April 1. (Kuna) Two Kuwait football team players, Amber Saeed and Jaber Zanki, were injured while training for the Asia Cup qualifying soccer tournament and sent home yesterday.

Amber and Jaber were injured during one of the intensive training sessions being held under the Kuwait national team coach Miguel Pereira, a Brazilian.

Sheikh Fahd Al Ahmed, the chairman of the Kuwait Football Association, talking about the departure to Kuwait of the injured players, said: "We have sent the injured players home because we feel that the injuries to their muscles will not heal before the tournament starts on April 7. Sheikh Fahd announced that five more players would be joining the 20-man squad already in Kuala Lumpur on April 5.

"Out of the 25 players, we will be selecting the best 20 for the tournament," Sheikh Fahd added.

Recently

Commenting on Kuwait's chances in the qualifying tournament, Sheikh Fahd said: "As you know, our team lost in two tournaments recently, the Gulf tournament and the qualifiers for the Seoul Olympics.

"As a result the morale of our players was down. When we arrived here three days ago, we were uncertain whether our players would be able to perform well in their training sessions due to hot weather here and other problems.

"So our first aim is to boost their morale and confidence in order to get a good team."

Sheikh Fahd said after three days of concentrated training, the boys had shown very good fighting spirit.

"And now we are confident that they will put up a good fight and make everybody happy," he added.

Tyson refuses to talk of defeat

NEW YORK, April 1. (Reuters) Undisputed heavyweight champion Mike Tyson, as stubborn on the dais as he is in the ring, refused on Wednesday to even deal with whether he would retire if Michael Spinks wins their fight this June.

"I can't relate to that question," said Tyson, who puts his 34-0 record on the line against Spinks on June 27 in Atlantic City. "I can't think of a way to lose, but I can tell you 100 ways to win."

Watford seem set for relegation

WATFORD, England, April 1. (Reuters) Watford suffered their sixth defeat in seven games today, losing 1-0 to Queen's Park Rangers and virtually sealing their relegation after six years in the First Division.

Northern Ireland international Alan McDonald gave Rangers their fifth win in six outings when he picked up a half-hearted clearance by the Watford defence and scored in the 50th minute.

Clash
Watford, who are last in the division, appealed unsuccessfully for a penalty after a clash between Paul Parker and Nigel Gibbs.

They failed to test Rangers' goalkeeper David Seaman and as they battled in vain for control of the match two players, internationals John McClelland and Kenny Jackett, were booked for fouls.

On Wednesday, two goals by the manager's son, Nigel Clough, gave Nottingham Forest a 2-1 victory over Derby County in English League soccer action, while Arsenal was held 0-0 by struggling Oxford United.

Clough, whose father, Brian, has taken Forest to two European Champion's Cup titles, scored in the 21st and 53rd minutes, before Forest defender Colin Foster accidentally scored in his own net in the 61st.

Clough's goals took his tally for the season to 20. At Oxford's Manor Ground, Robbie Mustoe went close to snatching victory for the relegation-threatened home side, but he shot against the post with 13 minutes remaining.

Meanwhile Manchester United, keen to end a largely disappointing season by finishing runners-up to runaway English First Division leaders Liverpool, will be without central defender Steve Bruce and transfer-seeking Norman Whiteside for tomorrow's home match against Derby.

Bruce, who has played in every League match since joining United from Norwich for £825,000 ($1.55 million) in December, is serving a one-match suspension.

Northern Ireland international Whiteside, in dispute with manager Alex Ferguson over an extension to his contract, is ruled out with an Achilles tendon injury.

Derby, among a clutch of clubs scrapping for points in a bid to avoid relegation, include United old boy Frank Stapleton who scored 60 goals in a five-year spell at Old Trafford.

Chelsea, who have gone 20 League matches without a win, welcome back striker Gordon Durie for the visit of League Cup finalists Arsenal.

Durie, scorer of 12 goals, has missed 12 games with a knee injury.

A capacity crowd of 35,500 is expected at the City ground for Nottingham Forest's match against Liverpool, who head the table by 14 points.

Kirkland and Eriksson take Safari Rally lead

NAIROBI, April 1. (Reuters) Kenya's Mike Kirkland and Kenneth Eriksson of Sweden took the lead in the Safari Rally today after mechanical problems on the drive up from the Indian Ocean port of Mombasa cost their rivals valuable time.

Kirkland, driving a Nissan 200SX, was first into Nairobi after 1,652 kms of the 4,220-km race with a time loss of 22 minutes.

Joint
Eriksson, driving a Toyota Supra, arrived minutes later with the same time loss, giving him joint first place.

Many of the other drivers needed major overhauls on the drive through the treacherous Chyuli hills, with gearboxes and suspension systems the main victims of the rugged terrain.

Vic Preston Junior of Kenya, whose Lancia Delta was running in second place in the first half of today's section, did a quick gearbox change on the outskirts of Nairobi and was in fourth place behind Finland's Juba Kanckunen in a Toyota Supra.

Defending champion Hannu Mikkola of Finland dropped out after he punctured the radiator of his Opel Kadett GSI and Lars Erik Torp of Sweden, who earlier had been joint third, quit after spending an hour changing his clutch and gearbox.

Italian Miki Biasion, whose Lancia Delta led early today, also had a trying time. He spent 30 minutes fitting a new turbo system and, like teammate Preston, had a gearbox problem to wind up sixth behind Swede Per Eklund in a Nissan 200SX.

Leaders after 23 of 90 time controls:
1. Mike Kirkland (Kenya) Nissan 200SX 22 mins; 2. Kenneth Eriksson (Sweden) Toyota Supra 22; 3. Juba Kanckunen (Finland) Toyota Supra 25; 4. Vic Preston Jr (Kenya) Lancia Delta 38; 5.
